eville deli promotes opening with free food

By Kevin Kramer Collegian Reporter

Free food! A college student's dream come true. During the past several weeks, that was the calling card for a new eating establishment in Aggieville.

Subway, a deli restaurant that opened its doors in August, has just completed an advertising promotion that included free sandwiches.

Coupons offering the sandwiches were distributed throughout Aggieville - on parked cars, at a hair fraternities and sororities, said Terry Robbins, manager of Subway.

The coupon's purpose was to show the buying public what Subway had to offer and mainly to let them know where it was located, Robbins

"We had a lot of people call up and ask if it - a free sandwich - was for real," Robbins said.

been very good, better than we salon, a theater, a bar, and at various expected," she said. "We tried other types of advertisement - newspaper ads, coupons and radio spots - but they didn't seem to work very well in letting people know we were here."

Subway is part of a new and growing national chain of restaurants with local franchises in both Manhattan and Junction City.

The other major franchise deli in Aggieville, Sub & Stuff, hasn't used draw customers. Most of the advertising is handled out of the area franchise coordinator's office in Lawrence, said manager Mike Gibson.

The ads are coordinated with the other two franchises in Topeka and Lawrence, Gibson said. The biggest promotion Sub & Stuff uses to bring in customers is a full-color coupon insert in the local papers.

Julie Haynes, manager of Rock-A-

"The response to the coupon has any major giveaway promotion to Belly Deli, said her store is in a different category because the other sandwich shops are more fast-food oriented.

"We've gone through a concept change," Haynes said. "As a bar that serves food, I want to keep the customer here longer. We run less on advertising and more on our drink and food specials."

"From the way business is going during the lunch hour, there seems to be enough business to go around," she said. "If a customer sees that we are full, they walk on down the street to someone else's place."

Frank and Arliss Douglass, who own and operate a "mom and pop" deli in Anderson Village called Subs-N-Such, use two effective means of advertising - coupons and word of mouth, Arliss said.

She said the use of coupons shows a visual return from money invested in advertising. While using newspaper and radio ads, it was difficult to determine if they affected business,

The Douglasses also distributed fliers at a local theater for five weeks, advertising an after-movie special, with little success, she said. "(Word of mouth) helps keep us busy between the coupons and seasonal business," she said, adding that it's the "perfect" form of advertising.

"We had one customer - who was in the military - who heard about us from a friend in Germany before (being) transferred to Ft. Riley," she said.

Hayden campaigns for GOP candidates

By Amy Lyons Collegian Reporter

State Republican leaders, including Gov. Mike Hayden, gathered Friday night in Manhattan at a fund-raiser for state senatorial candidate Lana Oleen. The announcement that U.S. Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., will be in Manhattan Saturday to campaign for Oleen and other Republican hopefuls was the suprise of the evening.

Sen. Dole will be at the Manhattan Community Center from 4 to 6 p.m. Saturday for a public reception, said Joan Mosier, Riley County Coordinator for Oleen.

'Sen. Dole called and wanted to know what he could do to help," Mosier said. "He'll be in Topeka for the state meeting, and thought he'd come by Manhattan."

Dole met with Oleen in August at the Republican National Convention in New Orleans. Oleen was a state delegate to the national GOP meeting.

Gov. Hayden, citing the major issues of Kansas elections, said the Presidential campaign plays an important role in party identification on all levels.

"Of course, the effects of the national election always have a certain coat-tail effect," he said. "George Bush is running extremely well right now in Kansas, and that tends to be very beneficial to Republicans running for the Hayden implied that each candidate's race was different, and certain unique issues are appearing across the state. He said the highway plan, capital punishment and medical malpractice are items of debate in this year's campaign.

Oleen, the candidate for the 22nd district, agreed with Hayden's outlining of the issues, and added prison reform and the Margin of Excellence plan to the list.

Oleen said she was running for state senate because of her concern for the issues, as well as her experience. She has served as a legislative liaison for the Kansas Council on Employment and Training for the past year, and has been working under Hayden's administration as the state director for communications for the Kansas Department of Human Resources.

"I have worked in a public service capacity for a number of years," she said. "I really felt I had something to offer the citizens here in this district with the experience I've had in Topeka as well as my background in education."

Hayden, discussing concerns of Kansans, addressed the Margin of Excellence plan, the highway bill and the national passage of drought relief legislation.

On the MOE, Hayden said he is meeting next week with the Board of Regents to discuss his January recommendation to the Kansas Legislature on state resources. Hayden said the state general fund for the MOE is around $40 million.

"Right now, the resources are encouraging," he said. "The state's financial condition is strong. As it continues to improve, we'll have a better opportunity to fund the Margin of Excellence.

Discussing the highway plan, Hayden said ■ See HAYDEN, Page 16

This is the year of the student, Kansas Board of Regents Chairman Richard Dodderidge said Friday during his visit on campus.

Pope John Paul appeals for racial reconciliation

By The Associated Press

HARARE, Zimbabwe - Pope John Paul II appealed Sunday for reconciliation, racial harmony and human rights in Southern Africa, a region teeming with tribal, racial and political problems.

John Paul's first full day on his tour of the region was filled with events, beginning with a meeting with the country's seven Roman Catholic bishops and ending with a session with diplomats.

In between, he celebrated a 21/2 -hour Mass before more than 200,000 people, met with members of the laity and spoke to 30,000 youths at a jammed sports stadium. His comments did not have the political edge that they did Saturday, when he arrived here for 10 days of travel through five blackruled countries that are neighbors to white-led South Africa.

On Saturday, the pope talked of powerful political, economic and ideological forces that endanger the stability of the region .

ASK delegates support second year of MOE

By Erwin Seba Senior Staff Writer

EMPORIA - Delegates to the Associated Students of Kansas Legislative Assembly on Saturday ratified support for the second year of the Margin of Excellence program.

In the same action, ASK positioned itself to respond to a study on the viability of the Kansas Board of Regents schools following a high tuition/high financial aid model expected from the Board of Regents' staff in October, said Mark Tallman, ASK legislative director.

A high tuition/high financial aid model would be "kind of a redistributionist policy" to increase revenues and maintain access to the regents' system, Tallman said.

"Set the price very high and then shuffle (the increased funds received) around so in effect you're taking from the wealthy ... causing them to pay more to help the less wealthy," he said.

ASK's policy position on MOE said, "ASK will support tuition increases proposed under the MOE plan (estimated 6 percent for residents and 12 percent for nonresidents) if linked to significant increases in student assistance."

"Basically, what we are saying is we only support the MOE if those items are in there," Tallman said.

Tallman said the policy statement positions ASK to respond to the regents' study.

ASK would be skeptical of the study if it stated such a model would be viable for the regents system to adopt, Tallman said.

The source of such skepticism is the findings of a tuition and financial aid study which Tallman prepared for ASK.

The study found that during the 1980's, tuition increased significantly ahead of the national inflation rate, a reverse of the trend in the '70s, Tallman said.

While tuition went up in the '80s, financial aid did not keep pace, the study reported.

"The total of federal, state and institutional student aid rose by 23 percent between 1980-81 and 1986-87. Tuition rose by at least 85.7 percent over that period, while estimated total costs increased by over 60 percent," the study states.

"I think our concern is simply that higher tuition policy at some point begins to discourage students," Tallman said.

Such a policy may also lead students to choose a career which will enable them to repay their loans faster, he said.

Shifting to that kind of policy, the fast track MBA guy may get out and pay off his loans in a couple of years,

other people struggling for years to pay off the same amount at the same level of interest," Tallman said.

The regents study is expected to be preliminary examination of the no problem. Whereas you may have viability of the high tuition/high financial aid model, he said.

"It's not going to be anything like 'Here's the report, let's do this.' Supposedly that's the case," Tallman

ASK offers regents alternative policy

EMPORIA — A selective admissions proposal made by the Associated Students of Kansas was returned Saturday to the ASK Policy Council by ASK Legisla-

The policy statement was an alternative to the Board of Regents' selective admissions proposal which was voted down by the Kansas House during the 1988 legislative accion.

ASK's Enhanced Open Admissions policy statement agreed with the need to tighten admis-sions standards at regents' univer-sities but provided other avenues for admission not mentioned in the regents' "qualified admissions" proposal.

Under the regents' proposal, students would be required to earn a 2.0 GPA in a recommended curriculum, earn an American Collegiate Testing score of 23, or graduate in the top third of their class.

Enhanced Open Admissions would only require students to earn a 2.0 GPA in the recommended curriculum. Failing that, students would have the opportunity to take nine hours of college work during the summer

The participating college would be required to fund one-third of the total operating expenses of the community service program. Mary Jo Lampe, senior in business management and apparel and textile marketing, said the program provides a means for students to earn their financial aid. Another portion of the educational opportunity through community service proposal is called the teacher service scholarship program.

Recipients of the teacher scholarship would agree to teach two semesters in "at risk" school districts in Kansas for every semester they financed their education with the scholarships. The scholarships would go to those in under-served fields of specialization. If a scholarship recipient does not comply with the terms of the agreement, he or she would be required to pay the scholarship plus 10 percent

Also receiving approval by the assembly was a proposal for a stateoperated savings program for families to use for educational purposes.

Under the plan, families would pay funds into the program. All the monies invested by participants would be invested as a total fund. The savings and interest earned in individual accounts could only be used to pay the costs for a family member to attend a U.S. college. A family could withdraw only the principal paid into the program and not the interest, if it was to be used for a purpose other than education. Tallman said the ASK Board of Directors voted to make passage of MOE's second year, the community service program and the savings program the three top priorities for ASK in lobbying legislators during the 1989 legislative session.

Ban would affect delicacies

SEOUL, South Korea — Seoul gournets continue to enjoy dog stew and Korean Olympic stars have been consuming barrels of snake soup despite government attempts to ban the traditional delicacies during the Summer Games.

The government has outlawed sales in Seoul of dog meat, snake, blood worm soup and other exotic dishes to avoid offending foreigners during the Olympics, which begin Saturday. Officials said visitors might be disgusted by the unusual culinary offerings and Koreans would be called barbaric.

But the ban has had little or no effect on Seoul restaurants or the eating habits of their customers. Dog meat is still a lunchtime favorite in many backstreet eateries.

"Even the government officials eat it. They just tell us not to let foreigners see," said one restaurant owner who spoke on condition of anonymity.

"The number of customers for dog has not dwindled. Not at all," he said with a big smile.

Korean athletes training for the Olympics have been eating dog, snakes and deer antlers to help build up their strength and stamina, Boxers, wrestlers and others believe eating dog and snake will give them the endurance and strength of the animals.

Scoul newspapers reported the Korea Amateur Hockey Association provided the country's women's Olympic team with $28,000 worth of snake soup. Association officials declined to comment.

Olympic soccer star Choi Soon-ho was quoted as saying he ate 500 snakes as part of his summer training.

Wilson Foods Corp. merges

OKLAHOMA CITY - Wilson Foods Corp. has agreed to merge with a susidiary of IFM Group, thwarting a hostile takeover offer by Doskocil Cos. Inc., officials said Sunday.

IFM is an international processor of meat and fish. The group's American affiliate is International Fish and Meat USA Inc. of Mountainside, N.J.

The IFM subsidiary, HL Inc., is to begin its tender offer for Wilson's common stock by Friday, Wilson officials said. Wilson spokesman Langdon Toland said Wilson board chairman Kenneth J. Griggy is to discuss the proposed IFM transaction Monday at a news conference.

The merger agreement calls for the company's common stock to be purchased by IFM for $13.50 per share. Dosckocil's modified tender offer for Wilson's 10 million shares of common stock outstanding is for $12.25 per share.

That offer expires Thursday, but Doskocil could continue its pursuit of Wilson by bidding higher than the IFM bid. Officials for Doskocil, a meat-pizza toppings company from South Hutchinson, Kan., could not be reached for comment. A joint news release Sunday did not say how Wilson's proposed transaction with IFM would affect Wilson's operations and Doskocil, which is about one-sixth Wilson's size by sales. began a $12.50 per share tender offer for Wilson in July after Wilson management refused to negotiate a friendly merger.

4 die in traffic accidents

Four people were killed in traffic accidents this weekend on Kansas roads, including two men who died early Sunday in Wichita when their motorcycle ran into the back of a delivery truck, authorities said.

Wichita police did not know one of the victim's names Sunday night because the man was not carrying any identification. Police said they could not release the other victim's name until relatives were notified.

The Kansas Highway Patrol said a 24-year-old Oxford man died about 10 a.m. Saturday, when his car ran into a utility pole. William Scott Wollard died in the wreck on U.S. Highway 160, about a mile east of Wellington.

A Paola man was killed Saturday in a two-vehicle traffic accident in east-central Kansas. Benny L. Morgan, 40, was pronounced dead at the scene after a pickup driven by a Paola man and Morgan's vehicle collided head-on, the Miami County sheriff's department said.

Open house attracts crowd

WICHITA - About 200,000 people turned out Saturday for the first open house at McConnell Air Force Base in three years, authorities said.

While watching the skies for airplanes, visitors also lined up to touch, admire and climb into about 80 flying and fighting machines on display. Mixed in with antique automobiles and food booths, they included a Vietnam-era helicopter and a C-5

Three parked B-1B bombers were the big attraction of the

Capt. Robert Work, a B-1B pilot, fielded questions from the crowd on the plane, which has been touted for its ability to fly great distances without detection but criticized for apparent glitches.

A year ago, a B-1B was forced to crash land in Colorado when it ran into a flock of birds. The B-1Bs at McConnell are being fitted with Kevlar, a bullet-proofing material, to keep birds out of the previously exposed fuel and electrical lines, said Col. Paul Muerling, the base public affairs officer.

Novelist cheats K.C. man

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - A judge has awarded a suburban Kansas City man more than $805,000 after a jury ruled that he had been cheated out of a deal to direct a movie based on a Janet Dailey romance novel.

Jackson County Circuit Judge Thomas Clark ruled Friday that H. Lawrence Winter, of Leawood, Kan., should receive $805,203 in the case.

On Sept. 1, a Jackson County jury ruled that Dailey's husband, Bill Dailey, was responsible for defrauding Winter. Dailey also serves as business manager for his wife, one of the nation's leading writers of romance novels.

Winter said in court papers that he had approached Dailey in 1982 to direct a movie based on a Dailey novel, Foxfire Light. Winter said Bill Dailey told him that the film would be the first of a series based on Janet Dailey's books, and that they would be made in Missour using local talent.

Instead, Winter said the Daileys used a Hollywood producer and director.

Student codes more explicit

By Laurie Cox Collegian Reporter

Newly revised student conduct codes are more detailed and explicit and will make it easier for the judicial boards to make charges and impose

A committee worked for nine months to revise the K-State Student Governing Association Judicial Code. Dianne K. Urban, student attorney, formed the committee to start amendment proceedings.

Urban said she felt it was necessary to amend the codes and to update them as with the SGA Constitution. The codes were amended to make them more detailed and to make the student attorney's and the judicial board's jobs easier, she said.

The committee of four students and seven faculty members and administrators worked for conduct codes "which would be clear and understandable yet detailed enough to enable students to conduct fair (judicial) proceedings with little or no supervision," Urban wrote in a memo to residence hall directors.

"A special attempt was made to avoid language common to criminal proceedings, since disciplinary proceedings are not criminal," she said.

In 1987, the honor and conduct code consisted of six general rules of good conduct expressed through moral and ethical values. The codes called for abiding by K-State rules, following community laws and customs, being honest, and maintaining responsibility and respect toward others, their property and their rights.

It is the job of Student Governing Services to create and to distribute a book which contains information on many topics including conduct codes, said Sally R. Routson, coordinator of student activities.

A previous code dealing with freedom of expression and student demonstrations was clarified to give students a better understanding of what was permissable, she said.

Intentionally and substantially interfering with the freedom of expression of others on University premises or at University-sponsored activities is expressly forbidden as stated in the newly revised conduct codes.

This new code, number 10, is taken from the expanded previous code number five.

This restriction raised concern from the committee, Routson said. Questions involved concern about demonstrations occuring at campus events, such as Landon Lectures, and how the students would be handled, Routson said.

The code states, however, that demonstrations can occur as long as they don't become riotous or infringe upon another's rights.

"Sanctions may be imposed for prohibited conduct pursuant to the Student Governing Association Constitution and By-Laws," according to the new conduct codes.

The new codes have a special definitions section which defines terms in detail to prevent them from being misconstrued, Urban said.

So far this year there have been no reported violations.

"Most of the violations that do occur happen in the residence halls and concern quiet hours and visitation privileges," Routson said. "Most of the violations we have received in the past pertained to minors in possession of alcohol," said Paul Schletzbaum, cheif justice of Goodnow Hall's judicial board. "As a first offense, (violators are) given a warning by their floor staff. Because of this, a lot of cases are not referred on to the judicial board. If the violator has a second offense, they are submitted to the board to have sanctions imposed," he said. Two days before the student comes before the board, Schletzbaum visits the student and explains which codes have been violated and leaves a copy of the codes with the student.

"Usually in cases of possession of alcohol, the board decides to send the violator for counseling with Bill Arck (director of Alcohol and Other Drug Education Services)," Schletzbaum said.

Arck said he and the student 'make an assessment of the student's behavior, typically in one or two meetings. It is an opportunity to explore the student's background and future and to make sure they don't have or are developing a drug or alcohol abuse problem.'

The new conduct codes will be published and distributed in the 1989 handbook, Routson said. The SGA office has copies of the conduct and judicial codes available for students.

Despite many losses football remains useful

K-State's football game Saturday against the University of Iowa didn't come in the prettiest package a season opener could come in. But what's inside a package is usually worth more than the wrapping.

Our football team may not reward its fans with a goodlooking scoreboard, but football is still a vital part of K-State's athletic program. Although there are doubts whether our football team will ever be successful, eliminating our football program should not be considered.

Without football, K-State would lose its ranking as a Division I school, as well as the financial benefits that go with it.

In the Big Eight Conference, all schools get an equal share of bowl earnings and TV royalties — no matter what their record.

So even though the 'Cats haven't touched prime time since the Independence Bowl in 1982, the University of Oklahoma and the University of Nebraska have kept pumping in revenue to K-State's pot. Last year the football program made a $600,000 profit. This financial support keeps non-revenue sports like cross country and volleyball alive.

Game for game, football still generates more income than basketball. KSU Stadium seats 42,000 people, and a half-full football stadium is worth more than a sold-out basketball game in Bramlage Coliseum with only 13,500 seats.

Games against Oklahoma and Nebraska attract thousands of fans. They may be there to watch the 'Cats get steamrolled, but we still get their money.

Football is more than a revenue source, it's a necessity of college life that must be preserved. Homecoming, Band Day and Parents' Day would have to be terminated or all crammed into basketball season. Try to picture thousands of high school youths crammed into Bramlage for Band Day.

Take away our football team, and you also take away the tradition of K-State — KU, one of the greatest rivalries in the NCAA.

The benefits of the football program clearly outweigh the empty scoreboard. Football keeps K-State in the Big Eight Conference, generates revenue for other sports and is a part of the college tradition we can't afford to lose.

Casualty of War on Drugs may be U.S. Constitution

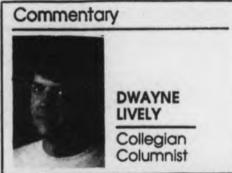

he rules of engagement in the War on Drugs look like they are about to change. Last Thursday, the U.S. House of Representatives approved an amendment to an anti-drug bill that would allow the death penalty for any murders connected to federal drug crimes. The Senate has already passed a similar bill.

While capital punishment is a very hot issue in this day and age, it is not, in the case of the House's anti-drug bill, the most serious change of tactics. The House also passed an amendment that would allow the use of illegally gathered evidence in drug trials, if the police officers acquiring the evidence had 'an objective, good-faith belief" that their search did not violate the Fourth Amendment prohibition against search and seizure. It is not clear whether this amendment holds true only for searches that were conducted with warrants which were later ruled to be illegal, or for any search a police officer conducts, with or without a warrant. The Supreme Court already allows the former in certain circumstances, so this appears to be an attempt to allow the latter.

Both measures are acts of desperation by a Congress and an administration that has been spending billions of dollars in a futile War on Drugs. The policy of zero-tolerance failed to hinder the flow of drugs in this country, and so did the policy of using military strikes on cocaine factories in Bolivia and Columbia. Now Congress is waging a war on the U.S. Constitution in order to fight the War on Drugs. The Thursday issue of the Kansas City Times reported that "President Reagan supports the main elements of the measures."

Unfortunately, it is not surprising that President Reagan would support capital punishment for drug crimes or a loosening of search and seizure laws. This is, after all, the President who allowed an Attorney General to remain in office who did not feel it was necessary for police to read suspects their rights before questioning because he felt that the police would never arrest a person who wasn't guilty.

The biggest problem with the capital punishment idea is that it appears that Congress is thinking "if we kill them all, maybe they'll all go away." Keeping track of bodies and killing as many people as possible didn't win the war in Vietnam and it will not win the War on Drugs. The capital punishment amendment is simply a way for lawmakers to make it look like they are doing everything they can to win the war.

The supporters of this amendment will say that the chance of getting killed will deter people from smuggling drugs. No. That's not what the amendment says.

Capital punishment would only be allowed in the cases of drug-related murders. It says nothing about smuggling. The flow of drugs still would not be stopped. Congress would then be forced to expand the amendment to include capital punishment for drug dealers.

This action might deter some people from smuggling drugs, but the chance to make literally hundreds of millions of dollars in the drug trade would more than likely inspire more people to smuggle than capital punishment would scare away from smuggling. The flow of drugs into the United States would not be stopped for very long.

While the capital punishment amendment is a useless tactic, for all practical purposes, the loosening of the search and seizure laws is a dangerous tactic. It leaves open too many possible abuses because it leaves too many specifics undefined.

What exactly is meant by "objective, good faith belief?" Who decides if police officers were ignorant of a certain law when they conducted a search? How do the officers prove they were ignorant of the law? Do we want police officers protecting us who are ignorant of the law?

The logic of the "ignorance exception" implies that ignorance of a certain law exempts a person from that law. People could claim ignorance of any law, from murder to tax-evasion, and the courts would have to prove otherwise.

lot of people would probably get acquitted. It is seriously doubtful that Congress would acquit an "average citizen" who plead ignorance to a law in a criminal suit. Why then are law enforcement officials granted a chance to break the law? Aren't they supposed to uphold the law? Evidently not.

The change in the search and seizure laws also sets a precedent that leaves open a whole vial of nasty illnesses. Homocide investigators and law officers who investigate other crimes will be looking to get the same right to bypass search and seizure laws. Police in one state, after all, have the same federal rights as police in another state. The result could be a total loss of search and seizure rights.

It is hard to predict exactly what will happen if the anti-drug bill passes with this amendment still on it, but should citizens let politicians take risks with their rights?

One thing that is interesting about the War on Drugs is that it is actually the second war against an illegal substance that has been fought in this century. The first was waged against alcohol in the 1930s. It too was a losing battle. Donald Nieman, associate professor of history, pointed out that during the Prohibition era, even though Congress was fighting a losing battle against booze, "no legislation was passed overturning search and seizure laws. Federal agents were, in fact, bound by tough rules governing searches." Orma Linford, associate professor of political science, added that during the Prohibition era, Congress "added the automobile search and seizure rules which exist even now." These automobile rules require law enforcement officials to have warrants to search vehicles except in a few rare cases.

United States has come since the era of Prohibition. Instead of moving forward, the country seems to be sliding backwards. Prohibition ended with the legalization of alcohol. Whether or not people see this as a step forward, at least the Constitution remained intact.

It is nice to imagine that the people and the political leaders of that era might have been thinking "we would rather lose this war than lose the Constitution." In this era, Congress, with the support of the president, is preparing to sacrifice a small part of the Constitution.

With friends like that trying to protect the United States, the "average citizens" better be ready to take action and protect themselves. From whom? That's a real good question.

Columnist discusses social sins

t's over. Labor Day Weekend was the finale of summer vacation, at least according to local radio stations and the holiday calander. I thought the first week of the fall semester was the perfect time to fulfill all my new resolutions, like never being late to class.

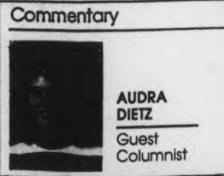

On Tuesday morning, I walked across campus and laughed at freshmen, who were still trying to find the signs with the building's names on them. Then I went to the vending machine in the basement of Waters Hall and bought a can of Slice. I tossed it in my backpack and ran up four flights of stairs to class. I sat in the second row, and the professor walked in. One resolution kept.

The lecture began, and so did my thirst. I opened my pop, forgetting I had just ran up four flights of stairs. Slice spewed out all over me and everyone in the first two rows. The can rolled wildly across the floor, spraying notebooks and backpacks with lemon-lime carbonation.

The graduate teaching assistant handing out papers got a good shot all over the front of his jeans.

I dashed to the restroom for some paper towels. Bolting through a door, I started ripping towels from the dispenser. A toilet flushed and a man walked out of the stall. Turning pale, his mouth dropped open. He acted as if he had never seen a woman in the men's room before.

"What are you doing in here?" I said. (Reverse psychology was not working.) The man boldly informed me that the ladies' room was on the first floor, and that he was in the right place. Taking my wad of towels, I ran back to clean up my mess.

I sopped up the pop while class heckled me.

"Freshman!" several people taunted.
Fine, I thought. I'm not about to tell them
I'm a junior. Then there would be no escape.

The GTA, who was not from the United States, asked me if there was a problem. I said no. I don't think he's ever drank much pop. As I apologized to the people I sprayed, I found they were more angry about having their notes ruined than about getting their clothes wet clothes wet.

I did learn something from this:

 There isn't any difference between the mens' room and the ladies' room except for those cute lavatories on the wall.

2. Both restrooms stock the same brown, scratchy towels.

3. Don't buy Slice in the basement of Waters.

his incident would probably be classified as a social disgrace by Emily relinquish first place in this week's Faux Pas Contest to K-State President, Jon Wefald. At Thursday's Landon Lecture, he said the hometown of Troy Lubbers, the student body president, was, "Arkan-saw City," Kansas, not Arkansas City.

Arkansas, (pronounced, Arkan-saw) is a state, not a town in southern Kansas. Arkansas is on Missouri's southern border. It's home of the famous Hot Springs and most of Table Rock Lake. Welcome to the club, Mr. President.

hat introduction wasn't the only blooper at the lecture. For second place, the Faux Pas Fumble Award goes to the McCain stage crew. They failed to lower the microphones so Barbra Tuchman, historian, could speak without straining her neck. The poor woman hardly could deliver her lecture gracefully. The plants next to the podium were the same height as Tuchman and crowded her face. Those of us on the ground floor got the lecture jungle-style: Tuchman from the trees.

This is not to condemn the Landon Lecture series. The series is prestigious, and the stage set-up should reflect that. The speakers should be able to reach the microphones without standing on tiptoes, and deliver a lecture without fighting artifical shrubbery. K-State should be properly prepared, because the speakers are prepared for us.

No one, students or members of the adminsistration are above humiliation. Nixon showed that. If you have nominations for next week's Faux Pas Awards, please send

Officials discuss agricultural issues

By The Associated Press

HUTCHINSON — Despite some discord, the state Board of Agriculture and officials from three of the state's largest agriculture interest groups displayed a show of unity Sunday aimed at improving farm and ranch opportunities in Kansas.

The 12-member board met in three one-hour sessions with representatives from the Kansas Farm Bureau, the Kansas Livestock Association and the Kansas Farmers' Union. The meetings took place at the Pride of Kansas Building on the fairgrounds.

Board member Gary Hall of Chapman called the meetings the first of their kind. The chief purpose was to improve communications among the groups.

"I think it's an excellent beginning," said Floyd O. Coen, a 17-year board member from Elkhart. "Farm organizations must work together."

But at times during the meetings the chemistry was anything but harmonious.

Farm Bureau and Livestock Association leaders threatened that if the board became more of a policy-making body, an idea its members have been discussing, trouble loomed ahead.

Agriculture board members explained that while they did not envision themselves "as lobbyists"—and conceded their role was primarily to act as a regulatory agency—they thought it was time for the board to take a stand on some agricultural issues.

It was a new twist for the Board of Agriculture, members said, but one the other groups found difficult to accept.

"You are a regulatory board," Farm Bureau President Doyle Rahjes said.

If the board started making policies "then possibly the Farm Bureau would have to do something that it's never done before: come in and sway the thinking. We've never had to do that before," he said.

Said Dee Likes, executive vice president of the Livestock Association: "I just think that there's a point of diminishing return if you try to make the state board too much of a policy-making body."

Nutrition tours offered to pa

Dietetic students to teach shoppers to be heart smart

> By Becky Jones Collegian Reporter

Learning how to be heart-smart can be as easy as making a trip to the grocery store.

Seniors in dietetics will be conducting tours of grocery stores in the Manhattan area beginning Tuesday to teach people what foods to purchase to encourage healthy hearts. The tours will be given as part of the American Heart Association's Food Festival Week which began Sunday.

Food Festival is an annual event designed "to promote heart-healthy eating habits in the public and encourage consumers to purchase nutritional foods," said Kevin Harker, north central Kansas area director for the American Heart Association.

The week's theme is "Trim Fat and Cut Cholesterol for Life." This is the second year for grocery store tours, which were well-received in Manhattan last year, he said.

The tours will be given by the students as part of a class project. Annie Yakshaw, one of 10 students involved in the project, said they will show people how to make food selections that are better for their health, which does not mean completely cutting out foods such as cookies and ice

Rebecca DeYoung, a registered dietitian and an area volunteer for the American Heart Association, said the key is for people to make better choices within the foods they like. And eating better can lower people's grocery bill, because brands of food that are less expensive are actually more healthy, DeYoung said.

Yakshaw said picking out hearthealthy foods can be simple if people just know a few basic things. She said the tours will show people how to read labels and choose foods that are low in fat, as well as rid the public of misinformation concerning the different types of fats.

It does take time to learn the ins and outs of healthy eating, so Yakshaw suggests that changing buying habits in one area at a time is the best route to a healthy heart.

"You've taken a lifetime to build the habits you have now, and you can't change them overnight," she said.

Tours will be conducted at 10 a.m. Tuesday in Manhattan at Food Barn, 222 N. Sixth St., and Dutch Maid, 1522 Poyntz Ave.; and at 7 p.m. at Dillon's, 632 Tuttle Creek Boulevard, Manhattan; and at IGA in Wamego.

Tours will be at 7 p.m. Wednesday at Dillon's, 2700 Anderson Ave.; Food Barn, 3011 Anderson Ave.; and Food-4-Less, 401 E. Poyntz Ave.

Tours will be at 10 a.m. Thursday at IGA in Wamego, and at Dutch Maid in the Blue Hills Shopping Center in Manhattan; and at 7 p.m. in Manhattan at Dillon's, 2700 Anderson Ave., and Food-4-Less, 401 E. Poyntz Ave.

Each tour will be conducted by a dietetics student and a registered dietitian. Yakshaw said those interested in going on a tour should meet in the front lobby of the store. The tours will last 45 minutes and are open to the public.

Citizens who plan small towns have different problems than professionals who plan large cities so three faculty members published a manual to help the planners in rural areas.

The manual, "The Small Town Planning Handbook," is a guide for small town planners, said Mark Lapping, dean of the College of Architecture and Design and contributing publisher to the

One difference between small town and large town planning is that large cities almost always have a professional staff of planners to take care of planning issues, Lapping said. In rural areas and small towns, the planning boards usually consist of citizens who are either elected or appointed.

Thomas Daniels, associate professor, and John Keller, professor in regional and community planning, worked in association with the American Planning Association to publish the manual that took two years to complete. "There really is a very different way of practicing planning (between small towns and large cities)," Lapping said. "The handbook is an attempt by us and the American Planning Association to not only recognize those things but to help educate citizen planners and professional planners all over the country of some of the nuances, techniques and possibilities of small town planning."

The focus of the handbook is to educate professional planners on the differences between large cities and rural areas, he said.

"Many planners simply have not respected the differences qualitative and quantitative - of working in a small town.

"(The manual is designed) to help people not only understand those differences, but to appreciate those differences and then develop a way of working in the community which respects those differences," Lapping said.

The handbook consistently emphasizes an aggressive program of citizen participation, and pushes the process of planning, he

"It is one of the few times in our lives that people get a chance to get together and talk about what kind of community they want to be, and then set out to accomplish it," Lapping said.

"The needs of a small town are different because the needs of the people living there are different," he said. "It's not the same thing as working in New York. One Manhattan is not the same as the other Manhattan."

Professor qualifies for NASA flight

By Matt Bunker Collegian Reporter

A K-State professor will soon be conducting biological experiments on a special aircraft that simulates conditions during space flights.

James A. Guikema, associate professor in the Division of Biology, received preliminary training at Peterson Air Force Base in Colorado Springs, Colo. on Aug. 29.

The training is a prerequisite to flying and performing experiments on NASA 930, a jet aircraft modified to allow scientists brief access to microgravity, Guikema said. Microgravity is a low gravity state similar to that experienced by astronauts on space shuttle flights, he said.

Guikema said he and other researchers will make the flight in late October.

NASA 930 flies a series of arcs that create a low gravity environment, he said. The plane flies three or four sets of ten arcs, with a total flying time of about two hours, Guikema said.

"The plane is affectionately known by its pilots as the 'vomit comet," Guikema said. "There's quite a bit of motion sickness on these flights.'

NASA 930 is only occasionally available for non-NASA personnel, Guikema said. It is frequently used to train astronauts and test shuttle equipment, he said.

As part of the preliminary training, Guikema said he and 11 other traiwhich air pressure levels were reduced to simulate air pressure at 25,000 feet. "The time of useful consciousness at 25,000 feet is five to 10 minutes," he said.

Trainces were told to remove their oxygen masks in order to experience low oxygen concentration, Guikema said. The trainees experienced differing reactions to the low oxygen state,

"One person fainted," Guikema said. Another trainee became euphoric, he said.

Guikema himself became disoriented and lightheaded, he said. "I realized I'd better put my oxygen mask back on," Guikema said.

Guikema said the group also experienced a simulation of conditions at 18,000 feet. Although the time of useful consciousness was extended to 30 minutes, the group performed tests that demonstrated a marked decrease in ability to perceive colors when not wearing an oxygen mask, he said.

"Within 30 seconds after putting the mask back on, there was a noticeable change in color perception,"

Guikema said.

In the final test, the chamber was altered to simulate the pressurization in a commercial jetliner, he said. Next, pressure in the chamber was altered suddenly to that found at 22,000 feet, Guikema said.

This test simulated a door blowing open suddenly on a jet aircraft, he said. Guikema said the pressure nees were placed in a chamber in change blew loose objects around the chamber and forced air out of the participant's lungs.

"All the air comes out of you," Guikema said.

Guikema said the point of the training was to "build the instinct to put the oxygen mask on when

The training qualifies scientists to do various types of research aboard NASA 930, he said. Guikema said his research will concentrate on plant growth in the space flight environment.

"So little is known about how things respond in low gravity," he Guikema's research is sponsored by Bioserve Space Technologies, a NASA Center for the Commercial Development of Space, he said. Bioserve Space Technologies is directed by scientists in the Division of Biology at K-State, as well as scientists in Aerospace Engineering Sciences at the University of Colorado, Guikema said.

Guikema was chosen for the flight by the Life Sciences Steering Committee of Bioserve, he said. The Manhattan contingent aboard the flight will consist of three faculty members, including Guikema, and three graduate students, Guikema

This is the first year Bioserve has been involved with the NASA 930 program, Guikema said.

Bioserve Space Technologies is a NASA-funded organization working toward developing technologies for the commercial use of space, Guike-

"NASA is very interested in developing interest in the use of space for commercial ventures," he said.

One benefit of plant research in microgravity could be the eventual development of a "controlled environmental life support system," Guikema said. Currently, NASA must send up sufficient oxygen for an entire space flight and bring the expelled carbon dioxide back to Earth, he said.

Plants could help to produce a regenerating environment that would make this unnecessary, Guikema

Little is known about keeping plants alive in a low gravity environment, he said. Scientists aren't sure how microgravity affects root development or how plants can receive water and nutrients, Guikema said.

Guikema said he is looking forward to his low gravity flight. "I wasn't when I first thought about it, but I am now," he said.

Two of 20 tanks involved in a simulated battle converge upon enemy tanks. The exercises were part of a three-day National Guard training session this weekend at Ft. Riley.

Just having 60 tons of fun ...

Some of them were out in the hot sun and dust because they believed it was their duty; others were out there because of the money. But some were out just to have fun.

"It's every little GI Joe's fantasy to come out here and spend a weekend doing this," said Cpl. Darren Chartier, junior in finance.

Chartier is one of more than 100 K-State students who are National Guard members and who participated in this weekend's training activities at Fort Riley.

The training exercises began Friday evening and continued until Sunday evening.

"It's just like a big Boy Scout camp," said Pvt. Lance Smith, Manhattan. Camping at night and simulated Camping at night and simulated war game training during the day reinforced the training the guardsmen received throughout the year.

The tank battalion participated in about five simulated war sessions a day. Although everybody couldn't always win, tank commander Lt. James Novak, Lost Springs, said there was something special about just being around the M-60 tanks with 105 mm guns.

"There's something about having 60 tons of metal and being in charge of it," Novak said. "It's great — and practice makes perfect."

The guardsmen camped Friday and Saturday nights on the fort. Their food consisted of two hot meals a day transported from a kitchen in the field — and lunch was C rations in a traditional green bag.

"Most of the guys would pay you to take care of that stuff (the C rations) for them," said Cpt. Matt Matthews, Topeka.

The guardsmen's training, Matthews said, is to prepare them for war conditions.

"We used to do a lot of riot training, but we don't anymore," he said. The guardsmen must maintain a

The guardsmen must maintain a level of competency that would enable them to be in Europe, prepared to fight, in 16 days. In order to do that, Matthews said, a lot has to be packed into a weekend's training.

"We may not be that military (in style) but I think our way of doing things is better than the military a lot of times," he said.

The guardsmen have to meet the same standard that active military members do with only two days of training a month.

"We have to be better than the actives. We have to be just as sharp or sharper," Chartier said.

"The National Guard tends not to have the quality or competence of the actives, but they make up for it in interest," said Sgt. Jim White, doctoral candidate in animal sciences and industry. "They're here because they want to be."

Having fun is what the weekend training camps are all about, Matthews said.

"Most important — we have a lot of fun out here. Especially when we do tank artillery. Don't get much sleep, but you have a lot of fun," Matthews said.

Some of the fun, he said, has been prompted by the recent controversy surrounding democratic vice-presidential candidate Dan Quayle's service in the National Guard during the Vietnam War.

"There are a whole lot of Quayle jokes going around out here," he said.

Pvt. Thomas Aaron, senior in architecture and geography, said there were two main reasons why he joined the Guard.

"I was brought up, more or less, to believe that everyone has some obligation to their country," Thomas said. "Besides, I like this (the training). It's a lot of fun."

The National Guard offers cash incentive bonuses for individuals who enlist in areas where there are numerous vacancies. In addition, the students receive pay for their active weekends and can receive financial aid benefits.

"A lot of people aren't aware of the benefits that the National Guard offers — especially the student loan repayment programs," Matthews said.

"I can't understand why students would go cook hambugers or serve pizza when they could do this — and make more money than they are at that," Matthews said. "And this is a little bit more prestigious then frying hamburgers."

Defensive plays lead Iowa to 45-10 win

By Chris Wilhelm Sports Writer

K-State football fans had something other than the Wildcat Marching Band to anticipate at halftime of the home opener against the University of Iowa Saturday at KSU

After 30 minutes of play, the 'Cats trailed the 17th-ranked Hawkeyes by K-State coach Stan Parrish said. just seven points.

But two big interceptions in the third quarter led to Iowa scores and helped the Hawkeyes to a 45-10 win. Iowa improved to 1-1. K-State dropped to 0-2.

"If we keep plugging and get some good play out of our quarterbacks, I think we'll win a game here soon,"

Head coach Stan Parrish greets K-State wide receiver Greg Washington as he comes off the field after catching a pass for the only Wildcat touchdown. Washington caught nine passes for a total gain of 100 yards.

For the 'Cats, quarterback Carl Straw was, to use Charlie Brown lingo, wishy-washy. The sophomore from Fairlawn, N.J. was 27-of-51 for 272 yards and a touchdown. He also threw five interceptions that were returned a total of 224 yards, two for touchdowns.

One of Straw's tosses was picked off by linebacker Brad Quast. The 6-foot-2, 240-pound junor returned the interception 94 yards for a score, tying an Iowa record.

"I got so carried away (after I intercepted the ball that) I almost ran out of bounds," Quast said. "It was a dream come true."

For the most part, Straw effectively moved the Wildcat offense as the Hawkeyes had to rely on the big play in the second half to end several Wildcat threats.

On K-State's second possession, Tork Hook intercepted a Straw pass intended for Greg Washington. Iowa took control of the ball on K-State's 38-yard line. On third down and seven yards to go from the K-State 35, K-State defensive end Danny Needham sacked Iowa quarterback Chuck Hartlieb for a 10-yard loss, ending the Hawkeye threat. This was not the case following all of K-State's miscues, as the Hawkeyes scored on three of their following five take-aways.

The other Iowa score following a tumover came after Gary Swim fumbled the snap from center on K-State's 24. Seven plays later, placekicker Jeff Skillet connected on a 22-yard field goal to give Iowa a 10-0 lead.

The 'Cats were able to sandwich a quarter between two scores of their own. On their first possession of the second quarter, Straw capped a 58-yard drive with a 12-yard touchdown toss to Washington. After trading possessions with the Hawkeyes, Hartlieb threw a 32-yard touchdown pass to Travis Watkins to put the Hawks on top again, 17-7.

K-State was quick to answer, though, scoring its last points of the game six plays later on Mark Porter's 38-yard field goal.

Iowa began the second half the same way they started the first half, scoring on its first possession. Hartlieb capped an eight-play, 67-yard drive by diving one yard for the score and a 17-point lead.

"I thought it would be very important for us to stop them (on their first possession)," Parrish said. "The good players buckle their chin straps halftime.'

"In nice words, I told my team we were ahead," Frye said, "but I also told them that we had to go out and play the second half like it was 0-0."

K-State's next two possessions resulted in turnovers and, consequently, scores for the Hawkeyes. By the end of the third period the Hawkeyes led 38-10. The 'Cats never seriously threatened the Iowa lead the rest of the game.

"The score is not very indicative of the way the game was played," Parrish said. "We tried to move (the ball) around and keep them off-balance. It might have been the best half of football we've played since I've been a coach here."

The 'Cats used a strong passing attack against the Hawkeyes to rack up 385 yards in total offense. Iowa had 377 yards of total offense. Wildcat quarterbacks threw 55 passes, Hawkeye touchdown in the second completing 30 for 293 yards.

K-State's defense played well at times against the larger Hawkeyes and forced two turnovers. Marcus Miller recovered a fumble, and William Price had an interception late in the game.

"We made a lot more big plays on defense this week," Parrish said. We got beat a few times when we gambled but they have got a good club."

"We proved a lot of things this week," said 'Cat linebacker Maurice Henry. "We put two new defenses in the end of last week. The assignments are pretty tough but we adjusted to them well. They were throwing everything they had at us."

Iowa quarterback Chuck Hartlieb, who completed 16-of-25 passes for 253 yards, also praised K-State's defense.

'They screwed up some of the and go after it. I'm sure (Iowa coach) stuff we were doing. We run a very Hayden (Frye) gave them hell at complex offense, and if you make a couple of adjustments, it kind of screws us all up," Hartlieb said.

By Chris Hays Sports Writer

Against 17th-ranked Iowa Saturday afternoon, K-State's sophomore quarterback Carl Straw was impressive on occasion.

And then again he wasn't.

But the end result was no different than the previous 16 Wildcat football games. K-State didn't win as Iowa. sparked by two big interceptions that were returned for touchdowns, notched its first win of the season.

Straw, starting in just his second collegiate game, earned praise from Parrish after his 26-of-51, 272-yard passing performance. But the thirdyear coach was definitely not pleased with Straw's interceptions.

"If we hadn't forgotten which color jerseys were ours then we might have been all right," K-State coach Stan Parrish said. "We moved the ball very well against them and you take away those (interceptions) and we might have had an outstanding chance to win."

Haunted by Iowa's multiple defensive look, Straw tossed five interceptions, three of which led to Iowa touchdowns. Each time Straw was ready to call for the snap, Iowa would quickly switch and give him a different look.

"They played cat and mouse with us all day long," Parrish said. "He had a heck of an effort, but we just got to get better play from our quarterback position. Our receivers were great. They caught almost everything we put out there." "We baited their quarterback," Iowa coach Hayden Frye said. "We gave him the impression that a certain pass pattern was open and it worked pretty good. We should have had a couple more (interceptions)."

Straw credited his success to the offensive line and his receiving

'Our receiving corps are really, really good and the offensive line played a lot better than they did last week. They were great," Straw said. "And you couldn't ask for any more from the receivers. They were catching the ball in traffic and everything."

'(Straw) didn't get on us when we let Tulsa sack him four times last week, so we're not going to get on him for throwing five interceptions. It's a team effort," said junior guard Chad Faulkner. "I thought we played OK. I'll know a lot more when I watch the films, but I feel a lot better about this week than last week."

The receivers were led by junior transfer Greg Washington, who made nine catches — three short of the K-State record — for 100 yards and a touchdown.

"It's a real confidence booster when you know before the game that you're going to be throwing the ball that many times," Washington said. "I felt we had a pretty good game today ... all the way around. I guess that's just the breaks. We'll just have to come back and give them a lot of hell down at Tulane next weekend." Senior Mark Austin had seven receptions for 54 yards and freshman tailback Antoine Dulan came out of the backfield to catch four passes for 71 yards.

'We've got a lot of good young kids that can catch the ball," Parrish said. "I'm real happy with that bunch and the future is looking great."

Parrish kept a promise that he made "off the record" Wednesday when he said the 'Cats may throw 50 times against Iowa.

"It was a matter of the fact that I didn't think we had a chance to win unless we threw it 50 times," Parrish said, "I went to bed Friday night thinking seriously that we might even air it out every play.

"We could have dinked a few field goals here and there and just tried to keep it close, but we were trying to win this football game."

Volleyball team captures crown at NIU tourney

By The Collegian Staff

When K-State volleyball fans gather at Ahearn Field House Tuesday night to watch the Wildcats play Wichita State at 7:30, they will be watching the champions of the Northern Illinois University Invitational Tournament.

The Wildcats rode roughshod through the NIU meet over the weekend, claiming three wins and first place.

"I'm most pleased that we elevated our level of play," head coach Scott Nelson said. "We turned in a real steady performance, offensively and defensively, and we have been playing better teams with each

In the second round, the Wildcats defeated the University of Mississippi 15-9, 10-15, 15-8, 15-8. Outside hitter Lynda Harshbarger paced K-State with nine service aces, tying a record set last year by Kristi Jacquart. As a team, K-State recorded 18 aces in the match.

Interference call leads A's to victory

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - After 10 innings and 14 runs, the game between the Oakland Athletics and the Kansas City Royals Sunday was decided in the baselines.

Luis Polonia was awarded third on an interference call in the 11th inning and scored on a sacrifice fly as Oakland rallied to beat Kansas City 8-7.

Polonia lined a double to the right of first baseman Pat Tabler, sprawled on the ground after diving for the ball. Tabler was called for interfering with Polonia as he rounded first base.

Dave Henderson followed with a sacrifice fly off Steve Farr, 5-3, the third Kansas City pitcher.

"He was laying in my path," Palonia said. "When I tried to make my turn, he moved a little bit into my path. I'm not saying it was intentional, but he moved into my path. If that wouldn't have happened, I would have had a triple.

Manager John Wathan was ejected when he threw his hat while arguing the call. Wathan played the game under protest.

"(Tabler) didn't have enough time to get out of the way," Wathan said.

"He (umpire Ted Hendry) pointed to second, then all of a sudden he's got third. I think it was bad judgment."

The Royals said Palonia would not have made third base because Bo Jackson fielded the ball cleanly in short right.

"I dove for the ball and turned to look where it was and he was right on top of me," Tabler said. "We didn't touch, but it broke his stride. He (the umpire) thought he could get third base. But he didn't attempt to go to third because Bo is standing right there with the ball."

Hendry said it was a judgment call. "There was no contact," Hendry said. "The runner had to go three to four feet out of the baseline. He stopped at second. In my judgment, he would have gone to third base."

The A's, trailing 5-1 after three innings, opened up a 101/2 game lead in the American League West. A combination of nine Oakland victories or Minnesota losses are needed for the A's to clinch the division.

Dennis Eckersley, 4-2, the fourth Oakland pitcher, worked two 2-3 innings and was the winner despite giving up Danny Tartabull's gametying RBI double in the ninth.

That's the difference between week No. 1 and week No. 2 of Wildcat football for 1988, and it's the thing that pleased Wildcat athletic director Steve Miller the most. "We were entertaining and exciting today, and that's what we have to be," Miller said as he watched the final seconds tick off the clock. "We

With K-State's depth at wide receiver and running back, the Wildcats can afford to open things up a bit.

When injured quarterback Paul Watson returns to practice today, the Wildcat passing attack should even be better. Although Watson, who is nursing a ligament tear in his throwing shoulder, might not play next Saturday, he most assuredly will be behind the center when K-State faces Louisiana Tech Oct. 1 in KSU Stadium.

Matt Suhey's 2-yard touchdown run put Chicago ahead, and a fumble recovery by Steve McMichael and pass interception by Vestee Jackson halted late Indianapolis drives.

The Colts took a 13-10 lead on a 12-yard run by Eric Dickerson early in the final period, then drove to the Chicago 37 before Dickerson fumbled with under six minutes remaining. The Bears took over and worked the clock to 1:38 before a punt gave the Colts their last chance. But the first pass from quarterback Jack Trudeau was intercepted by Jackson and the Bears retained possession the rest of the game. Chicago is 2-0, Indianapolis 0-2.

Bills 9, Dolphins 6

Scott Norwood kicked two of his three field goals in the fourth quarter as the Buffalo Bills overcame four turnovers to edge the Dolphins.

Norwood gave Buffalo its second win of the year with the last of the game's five field goals - a 28-yarder - with 3:12 left in the game after an ineligible man downfield penalty nullified a 7-yard Jim Kelly to Chris Burkett touchdown pass.

The Dolphins, 0-2, drove from their own 28 to the Buffalo 35, but a fourth-down Dan Marino pass to Jim Jensen was incomplete with 37 seconds left.

Saints 29, Falcons 21

Dalton Hilliard ran for 97 yards and scored a clinching touchdown on a 4-yard run with 8:52 remaining. Hilliard, who twice lost fumbles earlier in the game, capped a 70-yard drive with his scoring run that enabled the Saints to square their record at 1-1 after trailing 14-3 early in the second quarter.

The Saints took the lead for good 19 seconds before the end of the third period when Reuben Mayes scored from the 17 on a sweep of the right side to end a 70-yard drive. The Falcons, 0-2, took the early fight to the Saints behind the passing of Chris Miller, who ended a 90-yard drive by hitting Ken Whisenhunt on a 12-yard scoring pass in the opening quarter. A fumble recovery set up a 43-yard drive early in the second quarter that ended on Miller's 34-yard pass to rookie Alex Higdon on a fourth-and-1 play.

Lips perform for 200 at Aggieville Party

By Mike Nichols Collegian Reviewer

Who would have guessed an inconspicuous blue van with license plates reading "Oklahoma is OK" was actually bringing Manhattan The Flaming Lips for a noisy night of innovative underground music?

The Lips performed to a crowd of about 200 Thursday night at Charlie's Party Dome in Aggieville, in an event sponsored by The Sound Shop and Budweiser.

Living up to comparisons to such groups as Led Zeppelin and Pink Floyd, this Oklahoma City trio also proved it could play its own ingenious brand of contemporary underground music.

"We don't care who we're compared to, if people compare us to someone they like ... as long as it's not Kingdom Come, or anything like that," said Wayne Coyne, guitarist and lead vocalist of the band.

When asked to describe their music, Coyne said the Lips try to create their own sound, trying to stay away from the old cliche "if it's got a good beat, it's good music."

"We just look at it as if the history of rock 'n' roll was thrown out the window," he said. "We try to ignore Elvis, The Beatles, or the Sex Pistols and play what we like."

With an impressive array of strobe lights, clouds of dry ice and multicolored flashing lights, the Lips emphasized another important component of their performance: the visual aspect.

"It's not just the music, it's the way it looks, sounds, the light show; everything about it," said Coyne. "We try to play music people will like to hear as well as see.'

With a constant crowd of people swaying on the dance floor, the Lips, which include bass player Mike Ivins and drummer Richard English, were a hit among an audience composed mostly of K-State and Manhattan High School students.

"I can see how they might seem kind of weird to some people, and how not everybody gets into them, but I think they're pretty incredible," said Brad Sjue, sophomore in psychology and lead vocalist for Dalai Lama, the opening band.

Some people may find them weird" due to past reviews classifying their music as drug-oriented, such as the July 11, 1987 issue of The Melody Maker, which described their second LP as a series of "hallucinatory meanderings."

When asked about the effect of hallucinogens on their style of music, Coyne said drugs were not an essential element.

"Everybody has done drugs to some extent nowadays," he said. "We sort of look at our music as a drug. You don't have to do drugs to listen to our music, but if you want to, that's fine with us."

Wayne Coyne, guitarist and lead vocalist of The Flaming Lips, performed Thursday evening at Charlie's Party Dome in Aggieville.

Crisis Center changes number

By Alan Wilds Collegian Reporter

Changing the phone number to the FONE Crisis Center may cause some problems, but the center's director belives that it should also lessen other problems.

When the center had a campus line, residence hall calls would often ring at the center, said Mary Kipp, director of the center. Problems also occured with calls not being able to get in at all, she said.

Kipp said for 19 years the FONE has been on the Universities' telecommunications system. The cost of the system was more than the FONE could afford on the budget allocated by the Student Senate, she said.

The new line has been installed and things are running much smoother, Kipp said.

"We have got some of the bugs worked out, but not all of them," she said.

The center's new number is 537-0999.

Because the center now has an off-campus number, the telecommunications department does not have any information on the number. Kipp said the center has a call fowarding service, but it is not reliable. Workers, she said, have experienced bad connections with

"It's urgent that we get that new number out, since somebody's life could depend on it," Kipp

Over the summer, the center received several suicide calls as well as battered women and rape cases. Kipp said these calls are often given referrals to the police department. At the end of the summer, Kipp said they recieved some calls from girls who were turned down by various sororities.

"We were there for them when nobody else was," Kipp said. Assistant director of FONE, Kristi Hull, said many people just

"Some people just call to have someone to talk to and share things with," Hull said.

Professional referrals are frequently given to people also, she said. FONE gives referrals about family counseling, sexually transmitted diseases, birth control, pregnancy, financial aid, scholastic problems, marriage, rape, drugs and sexuality.

Kipp and Hull said they stressed to callers that they do not judge the morality of any issue.

Kipp said the center is in the process of looking for volunteers

"College kids make great volunteers because they come up with fresh new ideas and don't mind the hours," Kipp said.

Video courses offered Wyoming forests still burning to home students

By Mark Rader Collegian Reporter

Televisions and video cassette recorders have become an essential part of some K-State students' education ... students who may never set foot on campus, that is.

The Department of Animal Sciences and Industry, Department of Foods and Nutrition and the Division of Continuing Education have combined to develop a home video program available to individuals across the nation.

"We have had students from almost every state, including Canada and Puerto Rico," said Frank Cunningham, professor of animal sciences and industry.

The program began in the spring of 1986 and offers 13 courses in various food and meat sciences, as well as basic chemistry.

Though anyone can take the courses, the majority of students enrolled are food inspectors from the United States Department of Agriculture, Cunningham said.

If the courses are taken as a group, they fulfill the guidelines established by the Food Safety and Inspection Services to qualify inspectors as food technologists, he said.

These inspectors enroll at K-State because no other university in the nation offers all of the required courses, Cunningham said.

"We are one of a kind. No other program equals K-State's," he said. "We are the only one to offer the whole package.'

People in meat and poultry industries also take a course occasionally to update themselves on new technology and to prepare for higher positions within their field, Cunningham

The classes offered in the program are identical, in context, to the ones taught on campus, he said.

The lectures are videotaped and sent to the student at home, along with the textbook and necessary handouts, Cunningham said.

"We are responsible for sending the student the tests in the course and then relaying them to the instructor for grading when they are returned," said Bill Lockhart, Division of Continuing Education.

The division is also involved in the production, distribution and marketing of the courses, Lockhart said.

While most of the courses involve videos, some use audio tapes instead. Students could also be required to come to the campus to complete laboratory experiments, Cunningham said.

In 1988, the National Organization of Continuing Education Programs gave K-State a national recognition award for a new credit program, he said.

"This program is a money maker. It is about to outgrow its britches," Cunningham said.

The video program costs the same as any other course taught through the University, whether the student lives in state or not, he said.

Snow slows blaze

By The Associated Press

YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK, Wyo. - Snow dusted parts of Yellowstone National Park on Sunday, giving firefighters a break in their battle against forest fires, and employees evacuated from park headquarters began returning.

Federal officials said they would double the number of soldiers sent to battle the fires that have charred nearly half the 2.2 million-acre park.

After months of drought and heat, temperatures were expected to reach only the mid-50s Sunday with humidity as high as 90 percent. Some sections of the park were dampened by light showers Saturday.

"The colder temperatures are going to raise the humidity and with the higher humidity, the wood will absorb some of that moisture. It'll be less likely to burn, although the fire shouldn't have much trouble," said Joe Halliday, chief naturalist for the west district of Yellowstone.

Winds were expected to stay in a more manageable range of 15 to 30 mph, well below the 50 mph gusts that had driven the flames the previous two days.

Fires have charred 883,000 acres of Yellowstone since June in what firefighters call the worst fire season in the West in 30 years.

Light snow and low temperatures also helped firefighters in Idaho, where wind gusted to 60 mph, and Montana, where evacuated residents of some ranches and small communities were allowed to return home.

Rain and lower temperatures dampened fires in Colorado, but 45 mph wind gusts whipped a Boulder County fire to 1,830 acres and led six families to evacuate. Heavy rains later Sunday stalled the fire and residents were allowed to return home.

Particles in atmosphere create red-orange sunsets

From Staff and Wire Reports

Because of forest fires at Yellowstone National Forest and surrounding national forests in Wyoming, Montana and Idaho, Kansans have been enjoying beautiful sunsets during the past week.

The smoke made a brown haze out by tomorrow." along Wichita's northern horizon Tuesday and was first seen in the Kansas City area Wednesday evening, when it gave the sunset a red

The smoke is drifting about 8,000 to 25,000 feet above the ground, said Ed Ferguson, deputy director of the National Severe Storms Forecast Center in Kansas City. It is not affecting the weather in Kansas or Missouri, but it does make sunsets more colorful by filtering light. In some areas, it is causing a haze in the sky, Ferguson said.

The cause of the colorful sunsets is the amount of particles in the air, said Phil Bills of the Topeka Weather Service Office.

"With all that smoke in the air, it usually causes your reddish-orange sunsets," Bills said. "There is more moisture moving into the area and that will have the smoke thinned

Ferguson said a change in the upper flow pattern should push smoke into South Dakota, North Dakota and southern Canada by late Sunday.

"Since more moisture is moving up from the Gulf (of Mexico), the conditions up around the big fires should be better for the firefighters," Bills said. "The moisture won't stop the fires, but it should

By Friday, smoke had spread as far east as Tennessee and Indiana and as far south as Mississippi and the northern Gulf of Mexico, Ferguson said.

Volunteers assist families of terminally ill

By Erwin Seba Senior Staff Writer

Allowing terminally ill patients to live out the last process of life dying - in the environment of their choice is the goal of programs like Hospice Care Inc. of Manhattan.

Hospice Care is one of the few such programs in the state which relies on volunteers to provide assistance to terminally ill patients and their families.

Lois Deyoe, president of Hospice Care, said Manhattan's hospice is fortunate to have an all-volunteer staff because volunteers' attitudes are different from that of paid professionals.

"An all-volunteer organization gives much more of a loving approach than that of a professional who works on an hourly basis," she from patient to patient, said Treva Hines, an education director with Hospice Care.

"(Volunteers do) anything that's needed, anything from washing dishes to holding (the patient's) hand, to grocery shopping, to babysitting to whatever needs to be done," she said.

"It gives them the chance ... to die where they are most comfortable, in their own home with their family," she said.

Deyoe said teams of hospice volunteers not only work with patients in nursing homes and hospital but also with their families.

"We keep operating as if they were in the home," Deyoe said.

Another goal of hospice is to allow patients to remain alert and free of the affects of pain during the last months of their lives.

Drugs are administered to the patient to block the pain their illnesses cause. But, special care is taken to assure the level of medication does not make the patient unconscious. "Our whole idea is that we make the patient comfortable," said Jane Eberle, vice president of Hospice

The dosage of pain killers varies according to the patient's needs, Eberle said. Nurses administer injections to the patients, but volunteers may be required help patients take oral medications.

Dr. Cicely Saunders founded the modern hospice movement in 1967 with the opening of St. Christopher's Hospice in London. For her work, Saunders was made a Dame of the British Empire by Queen Elizabeth II

Hines said the U.S. hospice movement started in 1975. Hospice Care was founded in Manhattan in 1978.

Deyoe said 150 volunteers work for Hospice Care. Usually about onethird of the volunteers are serving on teams, one-third are on the standard six-month break after serving on a team and one-third are unavailable to Volunteer teams become part of the extended family of care-givers for patients and their families. The duties volunteer teams perform depend on the needs of the family they are working with, Hines said.

Hospice Care attempts to provide support during the last six months of a patient's life but, "that's always difficult to judge," Hines said.

In Manhattan the longest time a team has spent with a patient is four and one-half years, and the shortest period was one month, Eberle said. How much time a volunteer works also depends on the wishes of the on drives through the country.

"She really enjoyed knowing that she was going to die, that she could see nature ... and just have a leisurely conversation and ride through the country," Hines said.

Volunteers can also help patients discuss their feelings about dying, Hines said.

"Sometimes patients are not able to talk with their families about dying. And some patients' families don't want to admit that the patient is dying. They don't want to talk about it. So the hospice volunteers get to draw the patient out and listen to the patient," Hines said.

As a member of an extended family, the volunteer must experience the grief process with the patient's immediate family, Hines said.

"If you've done it once or twice the family members see the feelings from Lou Gehrig's disease.

Hines said she would take the woman they are having are normal and then they're not quite so frustrated," Hines said.

Volunteers are provided a sixmonth break period from working for Hospice Care so they may work through their own grief. "It's just advisable that they stay completely away from the program,' Deyoe said.

If volunteers think they are not ready or cannot perform the duties required of them, they can reject the opportunity to work on a team.

Dr. George Bascom works with the Hospice Care to advise it on the needs of patients. And an area psychiatrist is available to volunteers who need counseling to cope with their feelings while working with patients or after their death.

Cancer patients are the most common participants in the hospice progit's not easy, it's never easy — but ram, Eberle said. Volunteers have maybe you are able to help the rest of also worked with patients suffering

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. - Newly crowned Miss America Gretchen Elizabeth Carlson, a classical violinist and Stanford University student with hopes of law school, said Sunday she plans to become a corporate executive.

"I'm definitely an overachiever," she told reporters.

"This wasn't luck," said Carlson, entered in the pageant as Miss Minnesota, said of her selection as Miss America 1989. She added that she is not superstitious and brought no good-luck charms to the pageant.

Carlson, 22, of Anoka, Minn., performed a spirited violin solo titled "Gypsy Airs." She has been studying violin for 17 years, winning national and state competitions and performing a solo with the Minnesota Orchestra.

After winning a preliminary talent competition last week, she confidently told reporters parts of her performance were "exquisite."

Pageant officials took pains this year to emphasize that the judges were looking for an "articulate, educated, dynamic role model" and not a beauty queen.

Carlson was crowned early Sunby her predecessor, Maye Rae Rafko. The selection of Miss America 1989 was delayed almost 12 minutes when judges had to cast new

KU, K-State share programs

Universities benefit

By Richard Broadfoot Staff Writer

Snob Hill. Silo Tech. The flaw on the Kaw. K-Who? K-Straight.

When the students of two universities refer to each other in such unflattering terms, it might not seem like such a great idea to bring them together.

However, a new spirit of cooperation has pervaded the usually tense relations between K-State and the University of Kansas, and loyal Wildcats and Jayhawks now find themselves with a great deal more in common than just an intense rivalry and a pair of winless football teams.

Recently the two universities have begun cooperative programs in architecture, cancer research and nursing. These shared programs allow students from each of the rival schools to take advantage of faculty and facilities not provided by their home institutions.

■ The recently opened Regents Center for Architectural Studies in Kansas City is an example of this new-found sense of cooperation.

The Regents Center is cosponsored by K-State and KU and is designed to provide students studying urban design with a more cosmopolitan setting in which to learn.

"We've found that while Manhattan is a wonderful place to study some aspects of architecture, it does not lend itself well to learning about the problems of urban design," said Mark Lapping, dean of architecture and design.

The University of Missouri at Kansas City has provided the studio, office and class space for the joint program on its campus.

"It is important for the students to have a university environment in which to work," Lapping said. "(The UMKC location) provides the students with access to a university library and recreation facilities, and can allow them to take electives." The center also provides continuing education programs for area professionals, and has brought a number of speakers to the Kansas City area. Another area where K-State

At K-State's Center for Basic Cancer Research, doctoral and postdoctoral students will be trained to specialize in the areas of molecular biology and cell-growth regulation. At KU and the KU Medical Center, trainees will specialize in anti-cancer drug resistance and tumor immunology.

"An interinstitutional program of this magnitude, combining the talents of scientists at these three regents institutions, is a unique approach," said Terry Johnson, director of the Division of Biology. "It is the only program of its kind."

K-State and KU have also announced a program to offer a bachelor's degree in nursing for Manhattan area registered nurses.

Registered nurses who have a twoyear nursing degree or hospital diploma can seek a bachelor's degree in nursing which is awarded by the University of Kansas. Nursing classes are being taught in Manhattan by KU nursing faculty.

Presidential hopefuls fight adverse situations

Dukakis to 'restate position'

By The Associated Press

George Bush lost his chief ally Sunday in the Republican National Committee amid a report about his activities under the Nixon administration, while Michael Dukakis conferred with Democratic congressional leaders to counter criticism over his defense policy.

Frederic V. Malek, George Bush's recent choice as deputy chairman of the Republican National Committee, resigned after it was reported he compiled figures on the number of Jews in the Bureau of Labor Statistics under orders from Nixon.

The Washington Post reported Sunday that former President Nixon had ordered Malek, then his personnel chief, in 1971 to investigate what was described in notes as a "Jewish cabal" at the agency.

Malek had been picked by Bush to manage the Republican National Convention in August. He later moved to the deputy chair's slot with day-to-day responsibility for the party's fall campaign. His resignation was effective immediately and there was no word from the Bush campaign on a replacement.

Dukakis, who has taken a more aggressive stance in recent days, spoke with congressional leaders in Boston about his image on national security and foreign policy issues and promised to "restate my posi-tions forcefully" this week.

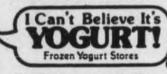

The Democratic presidential nominee criticized President Reagan for his veto of a defense authorization bill that had bipartisan support, and faulted the administration for its handling of the defense procurement scandal.

Dukakis suggested that the administration is "searching for scapegoats instead of solutions" to influence-peddling and the exchange of secret information at the Pentagon.

After the meeting, Dukakis con-

Malek's departure followed the embarrassing departure last week of Jerome Brentar from Bush's campaign organization for ethnic groups. Brentar, a Cleveland travel agent, had been an active defender of Ohio autoworker John Demjanjuk, who was extradited and convicted in Israel of being a Nazi war criminal.

Last week, the Washington Jewish Week newspaper reported that Brentar was active in groups that denied the existence of the Holocaust and made anti-Semitic statements. The report named several members of the ethnic coalition who had ties to fascistic and anti-Semitic groups.

The Democratic vice presidential nominee, Sen. Lloyd Bentsen of Texas, said Bush's difficulties with the ethnic coalition and the presence on his staff of three partners in a Washington lobbying firm hired by the government of the Bahamas was ceded that he is not in total agreement the result of the vice president's campaign politics.

> The three senior advisers worked for a lobbying firm that received $800,000 in 1985 and 1986 from the Bahamian government. Lynden O. Pindling, the prime minister of the Bahamas, long has been suspected of involvement with drug traffickers.

> "I think the problem that you run into is that there's kowtowing to the hard right," Bentsen said in an interview aboard his campaign plane en route from Los Angeles to Washington. "And I think he did it, for example, even in choosing a vice presidential candidate. He chose someone who was on (New Hampshire) Senator Gordon Humphrey's short list. Humphrey is the guru of the hard right and he's absolutely ecstatic he chose one of their own."

In a related development, the two campaigns agreed on the length and format of the two presidential debates, but failed to reach a decision on whether the candidates would stand or sit during their encounter.

Bush's deputy chairman resigns; Poll projects close race

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA - George Bush and Michael Dukakis are locked in a statistical dead heat in Kansas two months before the November presidential election, based on results of the Kansas Poll published in the Sunday Topeka Capital-Journal.

In a copyright story, the newspaper said a scientific survey of 500 voting-age Kansans taken by telephone interview Aug. 29-Sept. 7 gave Bush 41 percent and Dukakis 38 percent, with 21 percent of the potential voters still making up their

The sampling by Central Research Corp. of Topeka for the Capital-Journal has a margin of error of plus or minus 6 percentage points, meaning the three-point spread between Bush and Dukakis is well within the margin. Given that margin, Bush could be ahead by as many as 15 points or Dukakis could be ahead by as many as nine points.

Hayden and Attorney General Robert Stephan, all Republicans, an approval rating of between B-minus and C-plus, and that four incumbent members of Congress who have opposition in November are comfortably ahead of their challengers.

The Kansas Poll showed incumbent Democratic Congressman Jim Slattery leads Republican challenger Phil Meinhardt, 60 percent to 14 percent, in the 2nd District of northeast Kansas, which includes Topeka, Lawrence and Manhattan.

It also showed incumbent Democrat Dan Glickman has a commanding 74 percent to 16 percent lead over GOP challenger Lee Thompson in the 4th District of south-central Kansas, which includes Wichita and Hutchinson.

Republican incumbents Jan Meyers in the 3rd District of suburban Kansas City and Bob Whittaker of the 5th District in southeast Kansas

The poll also showed Kansans also have large leads. Meyers was give President Reagan, Gov. Mike favored in the poll 69-12 over Democrat Lionel Kunst while Whittaker had a 75-14 lead over Democrat John A. Barnes.

First District Republican Rep. Pat Roberts has no November opponent.

The presidential race survey showed Republican Bush's strength is in the 2nd District, where 44 percent of the respondents said they would vote for him if the election was taken when they were asked and 34 percent opted for Dukakis. Dukakis, was strongest in the 3rd District, where he was picked by 46 percent of those sampled and Bush was picked by 38 percent.

In the 4th District, Bush had 39 percent to Dukakis' 35 percent. In the 1st District of western Kansas, it was 42-39 for Bush and in the 5th District it was 42-38 for Bush.

Among independents surveyed, 41 percent supported Dukakis and 30 percent went for Bush, with the rest Excellence." Dodderidge said the Regents were requesting $48 million from the general revenue fund for the plan, emphasizing the importance of support from the Kansas Legislature.

"We need to use a 'full-court press' in the next legislative session to keep up with funding," he said. He added that the success of the MOE depends on more than just state funding; the Regents schools must have alumni support. "The real 'margin of excellence' is from private funding," he said, noting that a higher percentage of K-State alumni pledge dollars than any other Big Eight Conference school.

In his meeting with faculty members, Dodderidge said their main concerns were funding for childcare and support of the Qualified Admissions programs for incoming

"The faculty would like us to develop some policy lines regarding the use of state buildings for childcare," Dodderidge said. Childcare has become a problem on most campuses, he said, adding that it is a matter of "much importance," requiring a large degree of local input to proceed.

On Qualified Admissions, Dodderidge said the high schools need to address the problem of student preparation before the universities get involved.

"The faculty likes to deal with a better student," he said. "They want them to be better prepared for a higher education."

Dodderidge and Koplik also met with representatives from K-State's classified staff. Although the Regents aren't directly responsible for classified staff, they will "try to carry their concerns back to Topeka to the Kansas legislature," Dodderidge said.

"The classified staff are under state Civil Service," he said. "They aren't controlled by the Board of Regents. On a college campus, classified employees aren't in the mainstream of campus life."

and praised Congress and the President for their "quick action" on the program.

"It's a tribute, really, to how effective and quick Congress can be if they set their minds to it," he said.

"We have 10 or 11 counties, mostly in the northeast, that will be affected by the drought legislation," Hayden said. "It will be widely utilized ... by a number of our farmers who have lost at least 65 percent of their crops."

Kent Glascock, Riley County Chairman of Oleen's campaign, said more than 100 people attended the function, which raised over $10,000 for Oleen's bid.

Glascock, who is co-chairman of the campaign with Mark Edwards of Geary County, said "in terms of money, her campaign is going well."

Radon gas seeps in Kansas homes

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA - A quarter of the Kansas homes tested for the presence of radon gas have levels high enough to warrant further testing, the state Department of Health and Environment reported today.

The tests showed that southwest Kansas had the highest percentage — 44.5 percent — of homes with radon levels high enough to warrant further testing. In north-central Kansas, nearly 44.4 percent of the homes tested had similar levels of radon, as did 43.2 percent in northwest Kansas, the report said.

The lowest percentage of homes with levels warranting further testing was recorded by southeast Kansas, with almost 3.3 percent. In southcentral Kansas, almost 12.1 percent of the homes tested need further testing, as did 26 percent in northeast Kansas, the report said.

The report also listed the results of the tests for each county. The state agency and the federal Environmental Protection Agency conducted radon tests in 2,031 homes over the last two winters.

Radon is a colorless, odorless gas that is produced naturally in the earth. However, it can seep into basements and become trapped in homes. If a home's level is high enough and people are exposed to the gas long enough, they are considered risks for developing lung cancer.

"This was simply a screening measure," said Harold Spiker, the chief of KDHE's environmental surveillance and emergency planning division. "It's a long-term risk. We do encourage people not to panic."

The persons participating in the survey were asked to monitor the radon levels in their homes over a two-day period using charcoal can-■ See RADON, Page 10

Shiite kidnappers discharge hostage

By The Associated Press

DAMASCUS, Syria - Shiite Moslem kidnappers freed West German hostage Rudolf Cordes at midnight Monday in Beirut after they declared they were ending his 20-month ordeal in response to Syrian and Iranian intervention.

The 55-year-old businessman was released in Moslem west Beirut, taken by police to the home of Lebanese Interior Minister Abdullah Rassi and then turned over to Syrian security forces.

Cordes then was put in a car and was driven to Damascus by Col. Ali Hammoud, chief of Syrian intelligence for the Beirut area.

"Mr. Cordes is now in Damascus. He is the guest of the Syrian government. He is in good health," said a Syrian official.

Rassi told reporters in Lebanon that Cordes was freed at an undisclosed location in west Beirut and police took him to Rassi's home, also in west Beirut. He said Cordes "is in excellent nearth.

Seventeen other foreigners, including nine Americans, are still missing in Lebanon and it is believed they are held by Moslem kidnappers. Longest held is Terry Anderson, chief Middle East correspondent for The Associated Press. Anderson, 40, was kidnapped in Beirut on March 16, 1985.

Cordes was the last West German held. He and another West German, Alfred Schmidt, were kidnapped in Beirut in January 1987 in a scheme linked to the arrest in Frankfurt of a Lebanese Shiite Moslem for the hijacking of a TWA jetliner.

Schmidt, an engineer, was freed Sept. 7, 1987.

By The Collegian Staff

There's no doubt about it. Some K-State students are just plain crazy about the men's basketball team.

Just when you thought it was safe to walk in front of Aheam Field House, Tent City III appears overnight.

As of 9:30 p.m. Monday, 11 groups had pitched tents on the east side of Ahearn to begin what has become an annual ritual of camping out before student season tickets go on sale.

If standard procedure is followed, ticket purchasing details won't be known until the first official practice at 12:01 a.m. Oct. 15 at Fred Bramlage Coliseum - some 31 days away. Pre-practice festivities will probably begin around 10:30 p.m. Oct. 14. Last year, the first tent didn't show up until Oct. 8, and that was two weeks earlier than in 1986.

"We're big basketball fans, so we thought we would get out here before anyone else did," said Brian Shank, sophomore in accounting. "The fraternities are always here first. We just thought it would be kind of fun - a big party." Shank heads an independent group which listed its name as the Bob Ueckers — "because we're going to be on the front row" - on the "unofficial" sign-up sheet at Christopher Nagy, sophomore in electrical engineering and "official recreation chairman of the Goodnow Basement inhabitants," was the spokesperson for the group that was second on the list.

"We heard there were some independents (starting to camp out), so we scrambled - grabbed a tent and a sleeping bag and here we are. We heard the rumor at 8:15 (p.m.) and we were here by 8:20.

Coach Lon Kruger, whose team will be the direct beneficiary of the support shown by the groups already camping out and those yet to come out, said he appreciated the loyalty of the students, but cautioned against anything that might detract from the reason they're

"We appreciate their enthusiasm and interest," Kruger said. "Hopefully they'll keep the priority of classes in mind - and anything else important that they're involved

worry for Bangladeshi students Floods bring

By Jody Hundley Collegian Reporter

The monsoon season in the South Asian country of Bangladesh has brought tragedy to its people. The country, the size of Alabama but with a population of about 110 million, has been devastated by floods - and the waters continue to rise.

For the Bangladeshi students at K-State, the floods have been frustrating. Telephone communications are out in a majority of Bangladesh, making it difficult to contact relatives.

"I'm worried (about my family) because the flooding is so severe. I tried to call them, but the line is busy or a voice says the call is not completed. People are used to hardships, but not like this," said Rezaul Karim, a physics research associate, who came to Manhattan three years ago with his wife and daughter.

"I feel very bad," said Tarique Matin, senior in electrical engineering. "I've had the same problem about trying to call my family. I'm worried about my brother because he goes to school in the northeast part of Bangladesh. It's been affected greatly by the flooding, from what I've heard."

Bangladesh, bordered on three sides by India and on one side by Burma, is a country where three rivers converge. The Ganges, Brahmaputra and Meghna deposit silt, a natural fertilizer, into the lowlands region for the rice crops to grow. The lowlands are located in the western half of Bangladesh.

Ninety-one percent of the population of Bangladesh is rural. Only 9 percent is urban. There are 1,600 persons per square mile.

"The rural population is most affected by the flooding, especially since it's severe. Lots of people will die from disease and starvation. I feel sorry about this," said Sahankar Saha, a doctoral candidate in

The monsoon season brings a warm air flow from the Bay of Bengal, said Stephen Stover, associate professor in geography. The warm air meets with the cool air of the Himalayas, causing tremendous Flooding in the region occurs annually during the months of June to October. The water is used for agricultural purposes. However, flooding to this magnitude devastates the land, thus ruining the crops and killing livestock. The population also suffers.

"Destructive floods occur every two to three years. They are caused by heavier than usual rainfall and snow melt in the Himalayas, the headwater region of the Ganges-Brahmaputra system," according to the Atlas of South Asia by Ashok K.

Dutt and M. Margaret Geib.

"The annual flooding is natural," said Muhammad Rahmatullah, a post-doctorate researcher in biochemistry.

He said three rice crops are planted during each rainy season. The crop too much this year. It came all at one time."

The aman has been destroyed, he said, and any rice that was in storage from the first harvest is probably ruined as well.

Seventy-five percent of the annual rainfall in Bangladesh occurs during this five-month period and 80 percent of the country's water is discharged through the Bay of Bengal.

Saha spoke with his father in Comilla, which is 55 miles east of Dhaka, on Friday. Dhaka, which is located near the center of Bangladesh, is the capital city and has a population of about three to four million.

"(My father) said that there was no flooding in Comilla. But he said in Dhaka, people were using boats to get around the city. Some people are still working in Dhaka, but it is limited," Saha said. Manjur and Nasreen Karim have also contacted their parents in Comilla, a city of 100,000. Manjur Karim, a doctoral degree candidate in sociology and a temporary instructor in the department, said that he and his wife called one week ago. They said that Comilla is not affected, but the outlying villages are. The highway from Dhaka to Comilla is completely covered with well since they cannot reach Dhaka,"

"We both want to go home, but we know that we would only add to the problem. I feel helpless and homesick," said Nasreen Karim, a junior in electrical engineering.

Muhammad Mannan, a doctoral candidate in statistics and teaching assistant in the department, said he had contact with his family one month ago.

'At that time, my parents said that it was raining (which is normal). But I haven't talked to them since then. I can't believe how severe it is in Dhaka because it's never been affected before," Mannan said. "I can't imagine what Dhaka would be like with all the water," he

The severe flooding could be attributed to several factors, according to the Bangladeshi students.

"The de-forestization in China could be one reason that so much water is coming into Bangladesh," Manjur Karim said. "The trees and plants help hold the moisture in the ground. Now, the water doesn't soak

"The (three main) rivers are filling up with the soil that is carried down by the water. The soil is deposited on the riverbed, making the river go wider, not deeper," Saha said.

The Bangladeshi students are takwater. Our parents are frustrated as ing a "wait and see" attitude about the flood situation.

"It's nature - what can you do about it?" Matin said.

Gorbachev hears complaints

MOSCOW - Mikhail S. Gorbachev, in his first public appearance after a six-week vacation, ran into crowds complaining loudly about food shortages and living conditions Monday in the Siberian city of Krasnoyarsk.

The evening television news program "Vremya" led its evening program with a report on the Kremlin leader's trip to the city, about 2,000 miles east of Moscow. Gorbachev had been out of public view since July 30, when he met with Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher of West Germany. Soviet officials said he was on vacation. Gorbachev asked for support for his reform policies as residents of Krasnoyarsk pressed close to him and complained about lack of hot water and long lines for meat, sausage and

The clamor was in marked contrast to the usual orderly scenes of Gorbachev visits on Soviet TV. Many of the comments and complaints were inaudible. "The most important thing is that you believe in our politics and in the leadership that is still being formed. It's still being formed at the regional and provincial levels," Gorbachev said.

He told the residents he was not interested in blind faith, but in reasoned trust for his policies and the people implementing them.

Leaders meet in Mozambique

SONGO, Mozambique - President P.W. Botha of South Africa, on his first summit-level mission into black Africa, met Monday with leaders of Mozambique's Marxist government, which has blamed much of its woes on Botha's nation.

President Joaquim Chissano of Mozambique shook hands with Botha at an airfield welcoming ceremony, then took him on a tour by jeep of the nearby Cahora Bassa hydroelectric project before a two-hour meeting.

Afterward, Botha said he invited Chissano to visit South Africa and the two leaders issued a joint communique affirming their support for regional cooperation. They said committees would be formed to deal with issues such as trade, economic development and migrant labor.

South Africa has signed an agreement to help rehabilitate the Cahora Bassa project, in the northwestern province of Tete. The power line leading to South Africa from the dam near Songo has been sabotaged repeatedly by guerrillas which Mozambique claims are aided by Botha's security forces.

Chissano said Botha gave assurances that South Africa was not helping the rebels.

Precautions planned for launch

WASHINGTON - Most journalists covering the launch of space shuttle Discovery will be moved to a remote site during the actual launch and be allowed to return to the press site only after the shuttle has lifted away, NASA and the Air Force announced Monday.

The precautions are being taken because studies "have shown that the danger to persons on the ground is much greater than was understood should an accident occur," the announcement

Media personnel in the past have observed the launch of space shuttles from a press area about three miles from the launch pad. Invited guests, including astronaut families, watched from a nearby VIP area. Under the new plans, both areas will be cleared just before and during the launch.

Bone percentage may change

WASHINGTON - The Agriculture Department on Monday proposed allowing hotdogs, bologna and similar foods to contain up to 10 percent ground bones and other meat remnants without identifying the ingredients in product labels.

The proposal to use "mechanically separated meat," or MSM, without telling consumers is supported by the country's meat processors. Use of the product has been a simmering issue between the industry and consumer advocates for more than a decade, and has included court challenges and repeated attempts to change the federal rules.

MSM is produced by putting the bones and attached meat remnants of a slaughtered animal through a grinder and forcing the mixture through sieves. Although most of the bone is strained out, some small particles - about the size of black pepper flakes - wind up with the salvaged meat in the final

Under current regulations, MSM can comprise up to 20 percent of the meat portion of certain products, which include hotdogs, luncheon meats, sausage, scrapple, canned spaghetti with meat sauce and other items. But labels must state that the product contains MSM.

The department said that if the proposal is adopted, MSM used in meat and poultry products "would not have to be listed in the ingredients statement on the label as long as it does not exceed 10 percent of the meat and poultry portion of the finished product."

Minister tried in murder case

NASHVILLE, Tenn. - A minister went on trial Monday on charges of beheading a handyman and burning down his church in an alleged attempt to assume a new identity and disappear with $50,000 in church money.

Jury selection is expected to take most of the week in the first-degree murder and arson trial of the Rev. John David Terry, who faces the death penalty if convicted. Terry may take the witness stand to break his yearlong silence in the decapitation of James C. Matheny. The slaying and fire on June 15, 1987, at Emmanuel Church of Christ Pentecostal Oneness stunned Terry's parishioners. Some have stuck by him since Matheny's body was found rolled up in a scorched carpet. "Two days before this happened we would have given him our last dime," said Marsha Brown, 30, who with others in the 40-member congregation has been attending weekly services in a borrowed building in nearby Gallatin. "I don't feel personally betrayed. More let down than anything else." About half the members have stopped attending services, she

Youth can't see zoo animals

CHICAGO - Some exhibits in the children's section of the Lincoln Park Zoo are so flawed youngsters can't even see the animals, despite a $2.5 million renovation, zoo officials said.

The main problems are in the new outdoor otter and raccoon exhibits, where a natural-looking rock wall was built as a safety barrier to separate the children from the animals, said Edward Uhlir, director of engineering for the district.

"None of the kids can see over the boulders," said Susan Fisher-Yellen, who recently took her 3-year-old daughter to the

"I saw 20 or 30 kids climbing on those boulders," Fisher-

Yellen said. "No question there are sight-line problems for little kids," said zoo Director Lester Fisher. "I'm 6-foot-1. I can look in, but if I were 4 feet, I couldn't. You just had to get down on your knees and know this isn't workable."

Zoo officials want the architectural firm that designed the exhibits, Hammond, Beeby & Babka, to correct the problems.

Marchers demand interim leadership

By The Associated Press

RANGOON, Burma - Thousands of anti-government demonstrators marched through Rangoon on Monday, and opposition leaders demanded that an interim government be appointed to supervise multiparty elections.

In other developments, more than 1,000 school children fasted in support of the protesters, and the military said it would shoot demonstrators spreading a report that two armed forces commanders had threatened to join the protest.

Gen. Saw Maung, Burma's defense minister and armed forces chief of staff, said in a nationwide broadcast Monday night that the public and military should support the government's plan to supervise multiparty elections soon.

Saw Maung said the military had allowed protesters to demonstrate freely "to avoid possible misunderstandings amidst various attempts to discredit the armed forces by way of spreading false rumors, propaganda and exaggerations."

Many thousands of student-led demonstrators marched through the capital, shouting demands for an interim government and multiparty democracy. At least five separate groups were counted, and estimates of the total number of protesters ranged from 10,000 to more than

More soldiers were seen on the streets Monday, but they did not interfere with the protesters, who dispersed peacefully.

In their first joint statement, opposition leaders again demanded the formation of an interim government to lead the transition to democracy.

Opposition leaders Aung Gyi, former Defense Minister Tin Oo and Aung San Suu Kyi listed their demands in a letter to Maung Maung. A copy was given to The Associated Press. The government did not immediately respond to the letter.

None of the opposition leaders have specified who should be in the interim government, saying only it should comprise people outside the ruling Burma Socialist Program Party and who are "acceptable to all the people." They also have not said if they would be willing to serve in a transitional government.

President Maung Maung has rejected the call for an interim

Hurricane Gilbert runs into Jamaica

By The Associated Press

KINGSTON, Jamaica - Hurricane Gilbert slammed into Jamaica on Monday with torrential rains and 115 mph winds, ripping the roofs off buildings and spawning flash floods and mudslides. One report said 30 people were killed.

Radio Cayman reported 30 deaths across Jamaica as the brunt of the storm lashed the island Monday afternoon. It said hundreds of families fled their homes because of rising floodwaters.

Telephone service to Jamaica was severely hampered. Radio Cayman's broadcast was monitored in San Juan, Puerto Rico. The storm pounded Kingston on the southwest coast, knocking down power lines, uprooting trees and flattening fences. On the north coast, 20-foot waves hit Ocho Rios, a popular resort where tourists were evacuated from hotels.

In Cuba, 115,000 people were evacuated from their homes as a precaution in five eastern provinces when Gilbert's winds brushed the island, Authorities in Kingston said looters stole mattresses from a hospital, the roof was torn off a home for physically handicapped people and a firefighter was hurt when heavy winds blew him off his truck.

At 9 p.m. EDT, Gilbert was centered near latitude 18.4 north, longitude 78.6 west, or about 175 miles east of Grand Cayman, the National Hurricane Center in Coral Gables, Fla., reported.

"The hurricane is moving toward the west near 17 mph," the center said in a statement. "This motion will bring the center of the hurricane over or near Grand Cayman in the early morning hours Tuesday."

The Cayman Islands, south of Cuba, are flat and have few sheltered areas, the center said.

Only minor injuries were reported in Kingston, the capital city with 750,000 people. The National Weather Service reported heavy damage to Kingston's airport and aircraft parked on its fields.

George Bush: Model for liberal republicans

ast Thursday, world-renowned historian Barbara Tuchman began the 80th Landon Lecture by asking, "Where are the progressive Republicans?"

For me, a progressive (liberal), this was not a difficult question. I can easily recognize one of my own, and George Bush is, dare I say, a liberal. And yet he would deny this label as vehemently as Michael Dukakis does.

Since Thursday, I have been busy drafting my lecture, hopefully to be the 81st Landon Lecture on Public Issues, which will be given in response to Tuchman. I plan to send a draft of my speech to the Landon Lecture Committee this week. In the meantime, here are some of the major points:

First of all, liberals are generally associated with huge federal governments and expensive programs. In this criteria, George Bush fits the bill. As The Wall Street Journal recently pointed out, the Republican platform doesn't call for the elimination of a single government program. Furthermore, it calls for a big tax credit for child care which will cost the government billions. But there's more. More Social Security payments for the elderly, more money for the Nicaraguan Contras, more money for new space programs, more money for Head Start, bigger defense budgets, a new catastrophic health care program, a new cabinet-level Veterans Department, more money for education, and a new Science Advisory Council for the White

And how will the liberal Republicans pay for all this stuff? Will they follow the old liberal democrat tax-and-spend philosophy? Of course not. The platform absolutely rules out a tax increase. Liberal Republicans subscribe to the much more politically savvy idea of spend-and-spend-some-more.

After all, why should anyone object to a government shopping-spree if nobody has to foot the bill? The liberal John F. Kennedy once said, "Ask not what your country can do for you, ask what you can do for your country." Today's liberal Republicans carry on this tradition by telling us, "Ask what your country can do for you, and you'll probably get it free of charge.'

Indeed, much of the old liberal ideology is alive and well in the Republican party. George Bush recently called himself a "lifelong environmentalist." He also wants to be the "Education President," a title Lyndon Johnson once claimed.

Even on silly issues like the Pledge of Allegiance, George Bush shows his true liberal colors. The fiercest dissenter in West VirginiCommentary

SCHMELLER Collegian Columnist

a Board of Education vs. Barnette, the Supreme Court case that declared mandatory pledge requirements unconstitutional, was Justice Felix Frankfurter — a liberal.

We liberals also applaud Bush's tough stand on civil rights. He has recently attacked the American Civil Liberties Union as a dangerous, extremist organization. Darn tootin' it is. Consider a brief filed by the ACLU last month which called for the acquittal of Lt. Col. Oliver North on the grounds that his constitutional right to due process had been ush has said he's tired of laws and organizations that are more concerned with the rights of criminals than the rights of victims. So are we does Ollie North and anyone else who sells income brackets.

arms to terrorists, right George? "Liberals," argued Tuchman, "are associated with this process (of redistribution of wealth)." Nonetheless, she seemed unwilling to recognize that, over the last seven years, Republicans have taken bold steps to redistribute the nation's wealth. For example, in 1977 the poorest 10th of our population got 1.1 percent of the national income. The richest 10th got 8.1 percent. By 1988, the poorest 10th had .9 percent and the richest 10th had 11.8 percent, or so says the Congressional Budget Office. The middle class, or the middle 60 percent of the nation's households. had 49.5 percent of the share in 1977. By 1988 they had 46.2 percent, or 6.6 percent less than they had 11 years ago. In the Reagan years, the bottom 10th on the income bracket ended up paying 20 percent more in taxes. Not to worry, though. None of that money went into government coffers. Instead, it helped to make up for the 20 percent tax cut the nation's richest 1 percent

Given the chance, Bush promises to continue this liberal redistribution of wealth. He has proposed some 12 new tax breaks for special interests, including cutting the capital liberals. And the ACLU disgusts us. And so gains tax in half - but only for those in high-e liberals, advocates of change, look smilingly upon these figures. We see that Republican liberals are changing the nation in ways we never dreamed. In their stand for big government, liberal ideology, civil rights and the redistribution of wealth, we are all beginning to wonder why we ever supported Democrats.

Sure, Tuchman has won the Pulitzer Prize, received more than 20 honorary doctorates and has had numerous best sellers, but she sure missed the boat on George Bush. If we are to believe what he says, he's a liberal. Indeed, with all the promises of new government programs, zeal for educational and environmental concerns, and further redistribution of wealth, I'm beginning to wonder whatever happened to conservative Republicans.

As a matter of fact, I think "Whatever Happened to Conservative Republicans?" would make a nice title for the 81st Landon Lecture. I'm expecting my invitation from the Landon committee any day now.

Staggered lunch hour provides better service

Anyone on campus from noon to 1 p.m. is either in class, studying in Farrell Library, eating in the Union, or sitting frustrated outside an office - waiting for it to open.

From noon to 1 p.m., campus practically shuts down because the majority of faculty and staff take lunch at the same time - but it doesn't have to be that way.

Students wanting to go through drop/add during their midday break in classes are out of luck if that break falls between 11:45 a.m. and 1 p.m. Students needing medical attention have the same problem, as the lunch hour for staff at Lafene Student Health Center begins at 11:30 a.m.

Each office decides its own schedule for lunch breaks. The state doesn't require that classified employees eat at a certain time, so why not stagger the lunch hours?

The financial aid office realizes the importance of staying open during the noon hour. The professional staff and counselors take their lunch from noon to 1 p.m., but someone is always at the front desk. That way someone is available to answer questions, access to the computer and pull files.

Employees in each office could arrange to have one person in the office during the lunch hour at least to keep the doors open and answer the phone. Then students could leave a message or find out when professors will return to their offices. The standard lunch break creates another problem on campus. The Union stateroom is total chaos during the noon hour. Anyone wanting to grab a quick bite between classes has to deal with at least half of K-State's faculty and staff at the same time.

If the employees in the financial aid office can stagger lunches all year long, then it can be done at the drop/add center the first two weeks of each semester. It could be done at other offices also. Variable lunch breaks would give faculty their break for the day, while also letting students accomplish something during that same

Don't we claim that, above all, this is a university where people care?

Veteran reacts to Quayle Candidate's actions lack courage

n response to Karla Redelsheimer's column in the Collegian, I would like to say that, as a veteran, I have real problems with her logic concerning Sen. Quayle's service in the Indiana National Guard during the Vietnam War.

Hers is not a new argument since this issue came up. Typically, the argument goes something like this: That was a long time ago. Quayle was young and didn't know he would be running for vice president some day. And besides, anyone would have jumped at the chance to get into the Guard rather than go to

All of these statements contain a great deal of truth. But it is equally true that not everyone had a chance to get into the Guard as Quayle did. By his own admission, calls were made. After that admission, the Republican campaign coordinators tried to make it appear that calls weren't necessary because there were openings in the Guard anyway. The question still remains whether Quayle would have gotten into the Guard if he hadn't had family connections. Even if there were openings, Quayle could have been quietly moved to the top of the waiting list.

Those without family connections had no choice of whether to serve in the Guard or take their chances with the Selective Service. Those without family connections consisted mainly of the poor, the under-educated and blacks - all of whom served in Vietnam in disproportionate numbers to the rest of the eligible population. As the saying went back then, "The rich get richer and the poor go to Vietnam."

But, let's give Quayle the complete benefit of doubt. Suppose he didn't need the family connections. Suppose he didn't get moved to the top of the list because of his community status. Suppose that there were openings in the Guard and he just took one.

I'm willing to bet that the National Guard at that time consisted largely of middle-class Commentary and upper-middle-class white males. When demand is high, the supplier can be more choosy in whom to supply. The Guard, then, became a fairly exclusive club of the best and the brightest, made up of those who could score the highest on the tests and could figure out the system well enough to find a comfortable niche in which to wait out the war. As for the rest — those who couldn't get into the Guard — the Selective Service wasn't nearly as picky as the Guard could afford to be.

R. CHARLES PEARCE

A point which is largely missed in the argument that "anyone would have jumped at the chance to serve in the Guard and stay out of Vietnam" is that this implies that those who did their military service in the Army, Navy, Air Force, Marines or Coast Guard were somehow dumber or more stupid than those who managed to get into the National Guard or avoid military service completely. This is an insult. This is a continuation of the insults that those veterans received upon their return to home after serving.

ost of us were simply unwilling and reluctant pawns in a global I political game that we didn't understand. We were caught up in a system that left us three options: serve, go to Canada, or evade the draft. The first option carried with it the risk of getting injured, maimed for life or killed. The latter two options also carried lifelong implications. None of these options held much attraction to ledged military hard-liner, just a little to the left of the "nuke 'em 'til they glow" mentality. And it personally worries me to have someone "a heartbeat away" who took the easiest option available during our most recent war. I, personally, would admire him more if he had fled to Canada or burned his draft card. Those actions, at least, would have shown more courage and more conviction than becoming a Weekend Warrior. Finally, Karla, yes, 1969 was a long time ago. But I still vividly remember the day in 1969 when the letters from my Selective Service Board started coming in. I remember the feelings of frustration, helplessness, and panic of being caught up in this system that could propel me to my death. I, too, wanted to complete my college training. Like Quayle, I was a "C" student - although only a sophomore. As it turned out, my Selective Service Board had a particular fondness for "C" sophomores that year.

beat the draft, though. I joined the Navy and served two years active duty in the Philippines, admittedly a relatively safe place. I was lucky - I had several opportunities to volunteer for duty in Vietnam, but I didn't take them. However, my destiny during that time was completely in the hands of the military power structure. Had it chosen, I could have been sent. Completely by chance, and chance alone, I was not chosen to go. There are strong indications, however, that Quayle managed to load the dice in his favor to eliminate almost completely any chance of his going. And that's what I, as a veteran, strongly resent about Sen. J. Danforth Quayle III, and what other veterans of the Vietnam era should also

'Friends' accepts book contributions

By The Collegian Staff

Beginning Wednesday, Friends of the Libraries will be accepting donations of books and magazines for its annual sale.

The organization will place purple boxes in Farrell Library and in a number of local grocery stores, said Virginia Quiring, associate dean of library development services.

The donation boxes will be in place for one month and the drive will conclude with the organization's book sale on Oct. 20.

Quiring said the organization accepts all types of books. Proceeds from the book sale will be used to supplement library resources on campus, Quiring said.

Friends of the Libraries members will be able to purchase donated books at a special presale Oct. 19, she said.

Pilot identifies hijacking terrorist By The Associated Press

FRANKFURT, West Germany -The pilot of a TWA jetliner hijacked by Arab terrorists in 1985 testified Monday that Mohammed Ali

Hamadi took pleasure in torturing the passengers and fired the shot that killed an American sailor. Capt. John Testrake, who commanded the plane during the ordeal, told the court he believed Hamadi was the more violent of two hijackers who invaded the jetliner's cabin and later killed Robert Stethem, a U.S. Navy diver.

But under questioning by defense lawyers, Testrake said he did not actually see Hamadi pull the trigger.

In a related development in Lebanon, Shiite Moslem kidnappers freed West German hostage Rudolf Cordes at midnight Monday after declaring that they were ending his 20-month ordeal in response to Syrian and Iranian intervention, a Lebanese government official said in Beirut.

A statement purporting to come from Cordes' kidnappers said earlier that Iran and President Hazef Assad of Syria "guaranteed" that the problem of Mohammed Hamadi and his brother, Abbas, also jailed in West resolved.

Abbas Hamadi was convicted of complicity in kidnapping Cordes and another West German in Beirut to try to force the West German government to free his younger brother. The other German, Alfred Schmidt, was released earlier.

Mohammed Hamadi is charged with murder and air piracy. He has admitted being one of the hijackers, but has denied killing Stethem. The Athens-to-Rome flight was hijacked June 14, 1985. It was flown to Beirut, where Stethem was killed, and 39

Testrake testified earlier that either of two hijackers could have led Stethem to a cabin door where he was shot. But after a recess, Testrake told the court he had a chance to get a closer look at Hamadi.

"I want to make an important statement," Testrake said. "I did say before that one of the two (hijackers) appeared to do more of the communicating and the other more of the violence."

He said, "It appeared that one of the hijackers (Hamadi) enjoyed beating the passengers more."

Thanks to a $6,000 grant from the National Endowment for the Arts, five writers and poets will visit the campus over the next two years to work with K-State students.

The writers and poets will visit for three days to work with selected graduate students and undergraduates by critiquing their manuscripts. Each person will also give one public reading.

"The benefits of this series are profound," said Jonathan Holden, professor of English. "The function of the writers is to inspire the students and faculty by showing them the best there is in creative writing.

"It is important to the community and to K-State to bring mainstream writers like these into Manhattan to connect us with other centers of culture."

The visitors are selected by Holden and Steve Heller, instructor of Each writer and poet will receive $1,200 for their contribution. Other sponsors for the program are the College of Arts and Sciences and the Department of English.

The first artist in the grantsupported series will be Judith Kitchen, who will give a poetry reading from 7 to 8:30 p.m. Oct. 14 in Union

In addition to the grant series, Holden has established a second fund to bring in less expensive writers for readings. This project, supported by private donations, is also designed to bring talented writers and poets to the campus to teach and inspire students and faculty, Holden said.

The first visitors in the privately supported series will be poet Roger Weingarten and his wife, fiction writer Ellen Lesser. They will do a reading at 4:30 p.m. Thursday in Union

Wichita State to challenge unbeaten 'Cats

By The Collegian Staff

The first of four matches against state rivals takes place at 7:30 tonight when K-State's volleyball team takes on Wichita State in Ahearn Field House.

K-State enters the match at a perfect 6-0 after sweeping through the Northern Illinois University Invitational Tournament over the weekend. The Wildcats have won all six of their matches in four games or less.

"Wichita State has always been a tough opponent for us," said head coach Scott Nelson. "They're playing good volleyball and I suspect they'll be excited to come up here. They have already defeated Missouri, a team that beat us last year."

The Shockers were only 6-23 a year ago, but have already posted five wins against four losses this season under sixth-year head coach Phil Shoemaker.

Tonight's match also will be the first of five to appear on local cable television.

"The television matches allow us to show the community the quality of our program," Nelson said. "I'm sure our team is excited about playing on live television."

As expected, a large part of the Wildcats' success is due to the play of the outside hitters. The trio of Shawnee Call, Lynda Harshbarger and Mary Kinsey have combined for 178 kills. Kinsey leads the Big Eight Conference in service aces with an average of .80 per game. Kinsey and Harshbarger are tied for second in the conference with an attack percentage of .370.

Gymnastics club rolls along Membership expected to double

By Susan Faler Collegian Reporter

Expecting membership to double and hoping to compete in an open meet at Colorado, the 20 members of K-State's gymnastics club are looking forward to the club's second year.

David Lien, assistant professor of physics and adviser for the club, said during the spring and summer semesters the club's membership increased and he expects that number to double.

"The increase in membership is largely due to advertising and exhibitions held in front of the Union," he said.

The club members hope to compete at the Rocky Mountain Open in Colorado Springs, Colo., later this

Depending on the number of students interested in competing in the open, funds for the trip will come from the club and individuals.

Lien said he knew of three other Big Eight Conference schools that have gymnastics clubs.

The University of Nebraska is the reigning National Collegiate Athletic Association men's champion, the University of Oklahoma has men's and women's teams, and the University of Colorado has a club team.

Last year's dues of $5 per semester helped pay for a tumbling platform section, Lien said. The platform is made of mats placed over skis and gives spring to gymnasts doing tumbling passes.

"Gymnastics is a sport for almost everybody," Lien said. "It uses all major muscle groups and trains the participant in body awareness. As such, it is a remarkably good sport for all body types.

The club is planning three exhibitions in each of the fall and spring

The club practices on from 9-10 p.m. every Monday and Wednesday; from 8-10 p.m. every Friday; and from 7:30-9:30 p.m. every Sunday. Practices are held in Natatorium 4 and use all of the University's gymnastics equipment.

UCLA moves up

By The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES - In the wake of a stunning 41-28 victory over Nebraska, the UCLA Bruins moved up to No. 2 in this week's Associated Press football poll. It was the school's highest ranking since the 1980 season.

While Coach Terry Donahue appeared pleased with the high ranking, he's not about to lay claim to having a team ready to contend for the national championship at this

"It means a great deal to be ranked No. 2," Donahue said Monday during his weekly meeting with reporters. "(But) I don't think the polls have any meaning until about the eighth week of the season.

'This is a young team. Let's not put it into the Hall of Fame this week. Give it 11 weeks. One game does not a season make, as we know. That sounds trite, but it's true."

The Bruins were ranked fifth before whipping Nebraska Saturday night in a game which wasn't as close as the score indicated. UCLA led 28-0 after 14 minutes of play and 38-13 at halftime.

UCLA, 2-0, accumulated three first-place votes and 1,019 points in the voting of sportswriters and sportscasters. Defending national champion Miami, Fla., idle last weekend, remained No. 1 with 46 first-place votes and 1,082 points. The Hurricances are 1-0.

Nebraska, 2-1, fell nine places to 11th in this week's poll. Clemson, 2-0, and Oklahoma, 1-0, continued to hold the third and fourth spots, while Southern California, 2-0, moved up one notch to fifth.

Rounding out the top 10 are Auburn, Georgia, Notre Dame, Louisiana State and Florida State. After Nebraska are West Virginia, Alabama, South Carolina, Michigan, Penn State, Washington, Ohio State, Iowa and Oklahoma State.

UCLA, which has never won a national championship in football, was 6-0 and ranked second behind Alabama in 1980 before losing at Arizona. The Bruins finished 9-2 that UCLA has been one of college football's better programs in recent years, as evidenced by bowl victories in each of the last six seasons. But the Bruins haven't been ranked higher than fifth at the end of a season since 1965, when they were fourth.

Donahue has often said that winning a national championship isn't the primary goal at UCLA.

"One of the goals we've had is to win the national championship," he said, "but a more immediate goal is to win the (Pacific-10) conference title and beat our crosstown rivals (Southern California).

in poll

"We try to win every week that we play, but if somebody asks me if Nebraska is as important as the game up at Washington, the answer is no."

The Bruins open the Pac-10 season at Washington against the 17thranked Huskies on Oct. 1.

The Bruins would appear to be a lock to be unbeaten going into the Washington game. On Saturday night, UCLA entertains winless Long Beach State, and then has an off UCLA entered Saturday night's game having lost three times to Nebraska in the last five years — by 42-10 in 1983, 42-3 in 1984 and 42-33 last year.

"This was a game that we pointed to, there's no question about that," Donahue said. "This team ticked me off. I wanted to put that skeleton to rest. I think that we were frustrated with our previous losses to Nebraska. We were geared up to play."

public recognition that those players have?

Part of it is due to his low-key personality, which some people mistake for a lack of ambition. Another factor is that he's Swedish, and when Americans think of Swedish tennis they still think of Bjorn Borg. And, finally, there is his counterpunching style on the court, which is effective but often boring.

Wilander is still no serve-andvolleyer, but he has become more aggressive.

Higher nitrate levels in crops cause deaths in Kansas cattle

By Lisa Pfannenstiel Collegian Reporter

This summer's extremely dry conditions have increased nitrate levels in crops used as feed, resulting in recent cattle deaths.

Drought-stressed crops, especially forage crops, tend to concentrate higher nitrate levels in the stem of the plant, said Homer Caley, Division of Cooperative Extension veterinarian.

Producers need to take precautions before using drought-stressed crops as feed to avoid nitrate poisoning in livestock, Caley said.

"Since the beginning of the drought, (K-State veterinarians) have been warning people about the potential problem.

"We, by no means, receive all the death loss reports from nitrate poisoning, but veterinarians have reported several cases to us in the last month," he said.

The biggest loss reported to the veterinary center in August was 10 head of cattle from a herd in central Kansas. The cattle had been fed chopped forage sorghum, Caley said.

"We see a case or two every day of a possible diagnosis of nitrate poisoning," said John Pickerall, associate professor of toxicology.

The problem is concentrated in the driest parts of Kansas - mostly in the southern and central parts, said Lowell Breeden, Division of Cooperative Extension veterinarian.

Central Kansas is facing a large problem in sorghum crops, especially sedan, due to increased fertilization and drought conditions, said John Brethour, beef cattle scientist at the Fort Hays branch of the K-State Experiment Station.

"The area surrounding Hays is one of the worst," Brethour said. Half of the sorghum feed in the state is located within 60 miles of Hays.

Farmers in the dry areas of the state also have baled weeds from their summer wheat stubble. Farmers need to be aware of the possible high nitrate levels in pigweed, Russian thistle and several varieties of fireweeds, Brethour said.

Caley said, "(Nitrate poisoning also) seems to be a particular problem when forage, high in nitrate, is cut and allowed to stand for hours in a forage wagon before feeding.

"We don't know whether letting it set in warm weather increases the palatibility so cattle eat more of the stems or what it does - but we urge cattle producers to be particularly careful," he said.

Caley said he urges producers to have a nitrate analysis run on drought-stressed crops before using them as feed in order to know what additional measures are necessary for livestock safety.

The test takes several days to complete at any of the area labs. The cost is $8 per test.

Nitrate levels over 3,000 to 5,000 parts per million should concern producers, Brethour said. He notes, however, a common inaccuracy of the nitrate analysis.

"The sampling procedure is a big problem. On the terraces of the field, stunted growth is common; but in the valleys, the forage is often tall and healthy," he said. "The combination causes immense variation within the same field."

The variation in crop quality can cause variation in nitrate concentration levels, making it difficult to determine the severity of the

To prevent nitrate poisoning, farmers should feed livestock prairie hay before using a new forage crop, said Steve Mosier, a Hays veterinarian. The prairie hay will dilute the nitrate concentration in the livestock's system, Mosier added. Caley suggests that producers reduce nitrate in the field by cutting the plant higher or by ensiling the Another feasible option includes rationing grain to livestock, allowing them to metabolize and to utilize more nitrate than livestock fed roughage alone, Brethour said. If nitrate poisoning does occur, chances of survival are slim. The signs of nitrate poisoning appear suddenly, causing death within hours or several days, Pinkerall said.

Mosier said, "In the possibility of nitrate poisoning, we see staggering, down livestock.

"We look for chocolate-colored blood in detecting nitrate poisoning,"

If treatment is successful, most animals will recover fully within 10 to 14 days, according to the Merck Veterinary Manual.

The manual also outlines several additional conditions that promote high nitrate concentrations:

Common trouble plants have been the redroot pigweed and lamb's

Toxic nitrate levels are sometimes found in common pasture species, such as rye grasses, during rapid

Crops grown on summer fallow may have higher nitrate content than crops grown on land in continuous crop production.

Corn growing under hot, dry conditions may concentrate nitrates in the lower stalk.

A variety of common weeds growing on marshy or muck soils that have high nitrogen and relatively low phosphorus and potassium contents accumulate abnormal quantities

■ Low temperatures, limited sunlight, poor mineral sources and application of plant hormone herbicides contribute to increased nitrate levels.

Most of the losses in the United States occur in the Great Plain states when oats, barley or wheat are fed as hay, particularly if the hay is fed several days after exposure to rain, snow or excessive moisture.

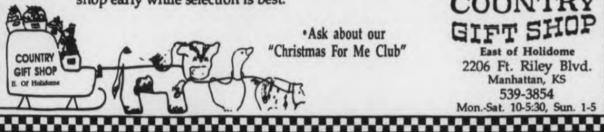

"The (nitrate poisoning) problem has existed since the 1890s," said Frederick Oehme, professor of toxicology.

"Naturally-occurring concentrations of nitrates exist everywhere,"

With the application of fertilizers, high nitrate levels are more prevalent, he said.

Having a Wildcat Card makes having cents a thing of the past.

Have you ever stopped for a cup of coffee and found you were a nickel short?

Have you ever had to skip a meal or miss a movie because you found you were suddenly short of cash?

Have you ever had to put items back that you really needed because you found you didn't have enough cash with you?

Your campus life is a busy one. You've got places to go, deadlines to meet. The last thing you need to worry about is having enough cash on hand to meet your daily needs.

That's why you need a Wildcat Card account. Wildcat Card accounts are designed to make your campus life a little bit easier. Simply estimate your needs for the week, the month, or the semester, and deposit that amount in your Wildcat Card account.

Then, whether you grab a cup of coffee in the Stateroom, buy supplies in the Bookstore, copy your project at the Copy Center, see a movie, go bowling, or buy a candy bar, your Wildcat Card is all you need!

No need to spend your last penny, just use your Wildcat Card.

Wildcat Cards are a free service at the K-State Union.

Special K-State Union discounts available now! See our Business office for details!

Voter registration deadline coming up

By Sarah Kobs Collegian Reporter

The deadline for voter registration is drawing near for those planning to vote in the Nov. 8 general elections. Eilene Colbert, Deputy Clerk for Riley County, said the deadline for registration is Oct. 18. There are 22 outposts where residents of Riley County can register to vote. The Student Governing Association office in the Union and the Riley County Courthouse are two outposts near K-State. The Manhattan area has 30 voting precincts, but only one on the K-State campus. Registered voters who live on campus will vote in Derby Food

"If you live off campus then you will vote in the precinct where you live," Colbert said.

Maps will be distributed to registered voters so they will know where to vote. The SGA office will also post a map.

"If a student is voting by absentee ballot, we encourage them to start sending off for them now," Colbert said.

Many students vote by absentee ballots because they are familiar with their hometown candidates, she said.

Colbert said students may obtain absentee ballots by mailing a request for an application to the county clerk where the student is registered. The county clerk's office will send an application for the student to complete. The county clerk's office will mail the absentee ballot immediately after it gets the application.

Colbert said it is important to sign the absentee ballot so the vote will be

The absentee ballots must reach the county clerk's office by 7 p.m. on Election Day.

"It is also okay to have someone at home arrange for your absentee ballot," Colbert said. "But this should be taken care of early to avoid confusion in the county clerk's office."

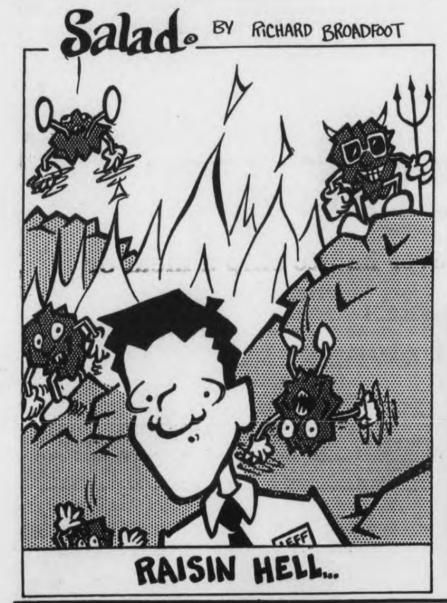

Riley County has already received requests for more than 200 absentee Voter registration is up this year and County Clerk Wanda Coder expects a big voter turn-out. There are 18,590 registered voters in Riley County now. The clerk's office expects a last minute rush in September and October.

"More people register to vote in the presidential elections because it is the biggest election," Coder said.

The League of Women Voters is planning voter registration drives from 5 to 9 p.m. Sept. 9 and from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Sept. 24 at Manhattan Town Center.

Athletes can pick healthy food

Staff caters to needs

By Nancy Prosser Collegian Reporter

Athletes at K-State are eating healthier than ever due to the joint efforts of KSU Athletic Department and the food service staff.

There are seven food lines available for students in Derby Food Center, said Mary Molt, director of Derby. Line A is designed for scholarship athletes, she said, and the training table line is open only to scholarship athletes on the men's football and basketball teams.

The menu in the athletic line is basically the same as the rest of the food lines. However, the athletes have more entree choices, Molt said. The athletes have two entrees that are budgeted plus one more that is billed to the athletic department, she said.

Sunday dinner for athletes is allyou-can-eat and is billed to the athletic department, Molt said.

Athletes also have available a sandwich bar, along with a dessert bar, said Tony Massop, junior on K-State's mens' basketball team. He said the food in Derby is usually very good.

Scholarship athletes don't need a meal ticket like other students, Massop said. Their names are checked off as they go through the line, to make sure that they come to dinner and that they are not eating more than once, he said.

Scholarship athletes are only supposed to eat in their dining room. In the past, athletes could eat with friends in the dorm, but complaints led to the dining room rule, Massop said.

Molt said she works with the athletic department to plan the athletes' diets.

"We take a team approach to working with athletes' diets. Athletes need higher-calorie foods than other students, because of the calories they expend. A good diet is not only a physical necessity, it is also a psychological edge for an athlete," Molt said.

Molt and Jerry Palmieri, weight training coach, plan individual diets that cater to athletes' needs. A new program has been implemented that identifies calories, protein, fat, and carbohydrate content in foods.

As athletes go through the line, entrees that have a high protein content, for instance, are assigned a color, so athletes can better choose and monitor their diets, Palmieri

"We try to work with Derby staff to get athletes high carbohydrate foods. The new color-coded system helps kids be more aware of what they are eating to maximize performance," he said.

"I feel like the Derby staff is doing an excellent job and our athletes are eating very well," Palmieri

The kidnappers' note, one of three issued Monday, said the decision to release Cordes "does not mean in any way the abandonment of holy warrior Mohammed Hamadi.'

If Hamadi's release cannot be gained legally, "then we shall be obliged to again resort to violence," the note said.

Hamadi is on trial in Frankfurt charged with air piracy and murder in the 1985 hijacking of the TWA jet and the shooting death of Stetham, who was a passenger.

His brother, Abbas Hamadi, 29, is serving a 13-year prison sentence in Frankfurt. He was convicted in April of complicity in kidnapping Cordes and Schmidt in an effort to force West Germany to free Mohammed Hamadi.

Rassi said that after Cordes was freed in west Beirut he "took shelter at a house. The tenants called police and a police patrol brought him" to the minister's home.

The minister said he offered Cordes food "but he told us he had already had supper. However, he accepted a cup of Turkish coffee."

Cordes was wearing "white trousers and a striped blue-and-red shirt and carrying a dark blue jacket," Rassi said. "He was clean shaven, his black hair neatly combed backwards and wearing eyeglasses.'

Cordes had "lost weight because he was far from his family. They (the kidnappers) were always offering him plenty of food," Rassi added.

Crop reports reflect summer drought

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - Drought and hot weather nibbled at the nation's corn and soybean crops last month, but new Agriculture Department estimates showed Monday that most of the damage had already been done in June and July.

Officials held to an earlier prediction that consumer food prices will go up an average of only 3 percent to 5 percent this year, with about 1 percent of the rise caused by drought. A further increase is expected in 1989.

The department estimated the corn harvest, which is under way, at a five-year low of 4.46 billion bushels, down 37 percent from 7.06 billion bushels harvested in 1987.

The new crop projections, based on Sept. 1 surveys, were down by less than 1 percent from the forecast a

In May and June, before the drought tightened its grip, USDA projected the corn harvest at 7.3 billion bushels, based on trends and an assumption of normal weather. Those projections were revised downward in July to 5.2 billion bushels, assuming farmers got normal weather the remainder of the season. In August the forecast was lowered to 4.48 billion bushels, the smallest harvest since 1983, when drought and federal acreage curbs reduced output to 4.17 billion bushels.

The soybean harvest was estimated at a 12-year low of 1.47 billion bushels, down 23 percent from 1.9 billion bushels produced last year but virtually unchanged from the August forecast. Estimates last spring called for about 1.88 billion bushels, and the July projection was 1.65 billion bushels.

Production of all wheat was projected at 1.81 billion bushels, down 14 percent from 2.1 billion produced in 1987 and 1 percent below the August forecast.

In May and June, USDA forecast this year's wheat output would be up slightly. The July projection was 1.84 billion bushels, and the August forecast was 1.82 billion bushels.

Cotton production was estimated at 14.7 million bales, slightly below the 1987 harvest and 2 percent below the August forecast. The crop was projected at 13.7 million bales in Corn is the largest and most important crop grown by American farmers and, as a feed ingredient, is essential to the production of meat, poultry and dairy products.

Soybeans, which provide highprotein meal and quality vegetable oil used in food processing, also are vital to U.S. food production.

No new estimate of winter wheat production was included. Last month's forecast, which was carried forward into the September report, was 1.55 billion bushels, down 1 percent from last year.

New estimates for spring planted wheat included durum, 49.2 million bushels, down 47 percent from 1987 production and the smallest harvest since 1961. The new estimate was also down 10 percent from August. lion metric tons.

Other spring wheat was estimated at 206 million bushels, down 54 percent from last year and 3 percent below the August forecast.

Cotton production was estimated at 14.7 million bales, down 2 percent from August but only slightly below the 1987 crop. The crop was projected at 13.7 million bales in July.

Overall, the department's Agricultural Statistics Board said U.S. crop production this year is expected to drop to 88 percent of a 1977 base used as a comparison. That would be the lowest since 1983.

Crop production last year averaged 106 percent of the base year. The record was 117 percent reached in 1985, 1982 and 1981. Assistant Secretary Ewen M. Wilson, the department's chief economist, said total grain production this year is expected to drop to 191 mil-

Scientists estimate that between 5,000 and 20,000 lung cancer deaths in the United States a year can be attributed to exposure to high levels of radon gas.

In August 1987, a KDHE report indicated that one-fifth of the homes tested had radon levels high enought to warrant further testing. Spiker said the agency recommended tests lasting at least three months, with a yearlong test the best for monitoring radon levels, which can vary in different times of the year.

"In most cases, the annual measurements will come back less than a screening measure," Spiker said.

Spiker said his agency was in the process of analyzing the results of the questionnaires and the tests. It also will enlist the help of the Kansas Geological Survey to determine why homes in certain areas of the state have relatively higher concentration of radon.

Here are the percentages of homes needing further testing for counties in which more than 30 homes were tested: Crawford, 44 homes tested, 4.6 percent; Douglas, 36, 12.9 percent; Johnson, 338, 29.3 percent; Montgomery, 44, 0 percent; Reno. 49, 6.1 percent; Saline, 33, 45.5 percent; Sedgwick, 220, 11.4 percent; Shawnee, 111, 25.2 percent, and Wyandotte, 105, 35.2 percent.

Wefald praises, challenges faculty at senate meeting

By Christina Doherty Collegian Reporter

Strategic Planning, Margin of Excellence and the Essential Edge Campaign were topics addressed by President Jon Wefald and Provost James Coffman Tuesday at the Faculty Senate meeting.

Described by Wefald as "another quality class," K-State enrollment for 1988 includes 34 National Merit Scholars and more than 215 valedictorians and salutatorians.

Wefald also praised recruiting efforts and the consequent enrollment boost.

"Kansas State has the highest increase of any university in the Big Eight this year," he said.

As for the Margin of Excellence, Wefald said he is optimistic the second year of the program will be approved.

"I think we're going to get year two of the margin," he said.

The K-State Foundation and all of its constituencies are working together to develop a multi-million dollar campaign called the Essential Edge Campagn, he said.

The money from this campaign will go toward academic scholarships, faculty chairs, faculty supplements and other areas where the University needs funding. This campaign will take place during the next five to six years.

Enrollment, Margin of Excellence, and Essential Edge Campaign all affect the strategic planning of K-State, Wefald said.

Wefald and Coffman both noted the major challenges that face K-

Farrell Library needs an initial $3 million to improve quality and another $2 million on an annual basis to bring the library up to good standards.

To have state-of-the-art academic equipment, $10 million is needed and an additional $5 million to $6 million a year after that.

■ An initial $10 million is needed, with $1 million yearly after that for improvements in campus maintenance.

In the area of computing, the University needs $4 million to $5 million.

Coffman said K-State doesn't compare well to peer institutions in

"We also spend half as much of our allocated budget on computing than our peers," he said.

In comparison to its peer institutions, the salaries of administrators at K-State are much closer than those of the faculty, Wefald said.

Following addresses by Wefald and Coffman, Faculty Senate approved the final graduation list of August 1988.

Changes in the Blue Cross/Blue Shield insurance rates for University employees were also discussed.

The state of Kansas is absorbing the increase in the rates of Blue Cross/Blue Shield of 1989 due to the efforts of the Kansas Association of Public Employees. There have been some reallocations of the costs among the beneficiaries.

The Health Maintenance Organization rates for University employees have been recalculated according to the number of individuals involved. The employee-children category will have its rates decrease by $52, the employee-spouse category will have its rates stay the same, and the employee-family category will have its rates increase 33 percent.

New camping plan announced

the area of computing.

By Karen Allen Campus Editor

Campers on the east lawn of Ahearn Field House will have a much better chance of making it to a class or two next week as a result of a solution proposed Tuesday evening by the Athletic Ticket Sales Task

The solution will limit the time that students can pitch a tent before the day season basketball tickets go on sale, but will still give the current campers the opportunity to reestablish their place in line when the day is announced.

Student Senate Chairman Doug Folk said he was pleased with the task force's solution - one that he believes meets the needs of all students interested in camping out for tickets.

"It's the most fair way of dealing with those who've camped out thus far and those who are planning on camping out in the future," he said.

The solution, which was the result designated 9 p.m. cutoff. of a day full of meetings between K-State athletic department personnel, those on the Athletic Ticket Sales Task Force and K-State administrators, is a five-point plan designed to benefit each of the parties involved.

At some point in the near future, most likely before the end of the week, the first phase of the camp out will officially be ended.

At that time, all groups presently in line will have their names recorded in the order they arrived at the site.

Then, at an arbitrarily determined future date, a purple flag will be raised on the Anderson Hall flagpole, signaling the opening of the second phase of the camp out.

■ When the flag goes up, those groups previously listed will have until 9 p.m. that day to reclaim their place in line. The groups need not arrive in the order they did initially to reclaim their same place. They need only be back on the campsite by the

Meanwhile, any group that did not have a place in line during phase one will be added to the list in the order of their arrival at the site as phase two begins. Any groups on the initial list not re-claiming their place in line will be dropped from the list, and those groups still on the list, and new groups added to the list during phase two, will be moved up accordingly.

Campers, many of whom were already beginning to tire after only one day of camping, seemed pleased with the solution.

"It sounds fair because they're giving us enough time to get back," said Karen Samson, sophomore in hotel and restaurant management and a member of the first tent in line.

.. and more time to organize," added Brian Shank, sophomore in accounting and another member of tent No. 1.

African bus hijacked by guerrillas

By The Associated Press

MASERU, Lesotho - Guerrillas hijacked a bus Tuesday carrying 60 nuns, schoolgirls and other people traveling to see Pope John Paul II, who was expected in this tiny mountain kingdom, diplomats and sources said.

Jervis Chavase, deputy high commissioner at the British Embassy. said he learned of the hijacking when the bus drove up and stopped in front of the diplomatic compound.

"A bus is parked outside the commission (embassy) and I believe the police have the situation in control," Chavase said at 1 a.m. Wednesday (7 p.m. EDT Tuesday). He said the hijackers have "asked to come into the compound and we have refused to let them."

He said the bus arrived about 6 p.m. Tuesday.

Diplomatic sources, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the guerrillas are believed to be members of the Lesotho Liberation Army, that which had been fighting the leftwing regime of Prime Minister Leabua Jonathan.

The guerrillas left the country after a January 1986 military coup deposed Jonathan, and had been holed up in South Africa.

City hears proposal on new airport tower

By The Collegian Staff

City Commissioners on Tuesday heard recommendations by the Flight Service Station Review Committee and the Airport Advisory Board to use a mobile tower unit at the Manhattan City

The report was turned over to the City Commission staff to investigate a plan for funding. Bruce K. McCallum, Manhattan director of public works, explained the cost to finance the tower unit would be broken down into a five-year agreement, with the first-year cost being approximately $93,000, plus additional insurance costs. The total cost over five years would be $443,533.

In an interview on Aug. 31, McCallum said an airport must have 125,000 to 130,000 opera-tions per year to receive federal

Once an airport receives a fed-

McCallum said the proposal made by Midwest Control Services of Olathe entails the usage of a mobile tower unit. The prop-osal is based upon operation hours of 16 hours a day, seven days a

"I'm all for this. We have got to get to work on this airport at all ngles, but how are we going to pay for this? Is the city going to have to suck this all up?" asked Commissioner Gene Klingler.

Other than with user fees, the only way to pay for the tower unit would be through the city general fund or cash reserves, said City Manager Mike Conduff.

Mary Harrington, a local pilot, expressed the urgent need for the ower unit.

"I have had four close calls. We have no direction. You don't know what's going on out there," Harrington, said.

Reagan releases money to U.N.

WASHINGTON - President Reagan has authorized the release of $188 million in U.S. dues payments to the United Nations and has directed the State Department to work on a plan for settling all past debts, the White House announced Tuesday.

Presidential spokesman Marlin Fitzwater told reporters in a late afternoon briefing that Reagan told the State Department to work out "a multi-year plan" for paying a grand total of $520 million in current and late U.S. dues payments to the world body. The U.S. also has $111.8 million in past due payments separately to the U.N. peacekeeping fund.

Fitzwater said the United Nations "has reformed its operations to the point" where Reagan felt he could act.

"The president will release $44 million, which was withheld in fiscal 1988, and $144 million which was withheld in fiscal 1989. He will request full funding of the United Nations' in Fiscal 1990, which amounts to approximately $476 million," he said.

The $44 million will be released immediately, Fitzwater said, while the $144 million that had been earmarked in Fiscal 1989, beginning Oct. 1, will be set free as funds become available.

Officials in the U.N. press office said they were aware of Reagan's action but that they could not comment until it is communicated officially to the United Nations.

34 countries offer studies abroad

By Amy Bullock Collegian Reporter

What is one thing that Africa, Asia, Australia, Canada, Europe and Latin America all have in common? These are just a few of the places where K-State students can study abroad through the International Student Exchange Program.

Two hundred learning institutions in the United States and 34 countries participate in the program, said Walter Kolonosky, professor of modern languages. It was started in 1979 and is administered by a central office staff, whose office is located at Georgetown University in Washington, D.C.

Kolonosky became the program's coordinator three years ago, enabling the University to become a member of the program.

"I was asked to consider it, and I read over the material and I liked what I saw - plus one does not have to be wealthy or in any certain majors for ISEP," Kolonosky said.

The program is based on the principle that students ought to be able to study outside their home country without having to spend an immense amount of money, he said.

This is possible because the progexchange of benefits, Kolonosky said. Every participating student pays his or her own institution a program fee, which is based on regular tuition, fees, and room and board in a residence hall.

The participants set up everything for the incoming student in their home country, while everything is being set up for them in the host country, he said.

To participate in the program, students must meet several qualifications. Each participant must be a regularly enrolled student in good academic standing, the institution where they are a student must be a member of the program, and the student must be enrolled one academic year prior to the exchange, according to program guidelines.

Knowledge of a foreign language is not always necessary unless students choose to go to a country where English is not the spoken language, Kolonosky said.

"Many of the places available to go are English-speaking countries, so one does not necessarily need to be knowledgeable in a foreign language," he said.

The program's participants receive a basic set of benefits from al activities and health services. Aphrodite Orologa, sophomore in biology, is a participant in the program. Orologa, originally from Athens, Greece, was attending the University of Natural Sciences in Nice, France, when she learned about the program.

"They did not have much posted about ISEP, and I had to go to many places and talk to many people before I finally found out all the information I needed," Orologa said.

Orologa has attended K-State since August, 1987, and said she likes it so much she is staying to finish her degree in biology.

"I had been to the United States before and had seen both coasts and all the sights in that part of the country, but I wanted to see the 'real' America and to me that means the Midwest," she said.

Orologa said she had a friend who had come to Kansas through the program, and that helped her decide to come here also.

"He really liked it here and said I should think about coming to Kansas. I've loved it so far, and I find the people here a lot more casual and easier to talk to upon meeting than the people in France," she said.

Furthermore, Orologa said she found the campus very appealing. "I liked how green everything was and how the buildings were spread apart. In Nice, the University was located right in the city. Here, at K-State, I felt like I was closer to nature," she said.

Orologa said she has benefited greatly through her experiences from the program.

"All the differences between my college in France and here are what have been the most interesting. I've enjoyed meeting people and having more freedom to take classes that are not just in my major," she said.

Currently 11 K-State students are studying in host countries, while K-State is hosting eight students from other countries.

Activists flee hospital, escape to consulate

By The Associated Press

JOHANNESBURG. South Africa - Three prominent antiapartheid activists, detained for more than a year without charge, escaped from a hospital Tuesday and took refuge at the U.S. Consulate in a high-rise office building.

The U.S. Embassy said it had "high regard" for the men and would not force them to leave against their will.

Two of the three are senior officials of the now-banned United Democratic Front - acting publicity secretary Murphy Morobe, a black, and acting general secretary Mohammed Valli Moosa, an Indian. The other is Vusi Khanyile, a black who was chairman of the banned National Education Crisis Committee.

The U.S. Embassy statement confirmed that the three had taken refuge at the consulate, on the 11th floor of an office building in downtown Johannesburg. The building is two miles from the hospital where they were being

The men have asked to meet with their relatives and with leaders of the anti-apartheid movement, but they have not disclosed any other requests.

"We were in frequent contact with these three men prior to their detention without charge, and hold them in high regard," the U.S. statement said. "We will not press them to leave against their

The statement said the United States does not offer asylum at its diplomatic offices. But it said these premises are inviolable under international law and may not be entered by the host government without consent. The embassy said it was discussing the situation with the activists and the South African government.

makers ignore Asian markets

break in which you do not see an ad for a domestic or an import automobile. Flip through pages of a magazine and you will find numerous persuasive arguments on why you should prefer the advertised car over its competitor. Open a prominent newspaper and you will find fullpage ads for automobiles which claim to be the best car of the year.

The competition in the automobile industry is becoming keen as automobile manufacturers based in other countries try to increase their share in the American automobile market. Ironically, the reverse is not true. American auto manufacturers are not agressively seeking markets abroad. Should they?

Positively yes. No doubt the automobile market in U.S. is huge, but it is limited. In the face of increasing competition as well as an endeavour to expand, American auto manufacturers should actively capitalize on opportunities in other countries.

I am not sure about the market share which here is hardly a TV commercial American auto manufacturers have in European markets, but I am relatively well informed about their meager share in the Asian markets. In a significant number of Asian countries, Japanese car manufacturers face virtually zero competition from their American counterparts, and thus monopolize the automobile market. This is in part to their proximity and in part to their successful marketing strategy.

Proximity to the market is not such a big advantage for the Japanese as compared to their sound marketing strategy. Sensitivity to consumer needs and excellent after-sales service are the hallmarks of their strategy.

Japanese automobiles are customized to the needs of the target market. Even the same makes and models vary enormously in their features when marketed to different countries. Japanese auto manufacturers realize that a typical American buyer would not settle for a car featuring anything less than an automatic transmission (unless it is a sports car), a high powered engine, a cruise control, an air conditioner and a fancy console with an array of useless meters. They also realize that they can ship a reliable, inexpensive, manual transmission, low powered engine car to a low income country.

xcellent after-sales service facilities make first time buyers loyal customers of the imports. Japanese auto manufacturers have the reputation of shipping more spare parts than ones used in too. the original automobiles. Such a provision keeps their product on the road for a long time and enhances their goodwill.

There have been some efforts by American and European auto manufacturers to establish themselves in Asian markets. You can observe a noticeable number of Americanmade autos running in Singapore and Hong Kong. But the success has been limited. Allowing for some technical pitfalls in their products, the major reason for their failure can be attributed to an inadequate supply of after-sale service and spare parts.

In the case of providing after-sales service, proximity to the target market helps decrease shipping costs. But being located farther from the market may not be a serious disadvantage, considering the automobile manufacturers can avoid high shipping costs by setting up an assembly line near the potential market. Japanese auto manufacturers did the same in the United States and now they are setting up plants in relatively closer markets

For example, in the early part of the 1980s,

Suzuki Motor Co. established an assembly line for a 800 c.c. compact car in Karachi, the main industrial city in Pakistan, which in turn is located in eastern Asia. Last year Suzuki Motors recorded sales of $119 million and showed a profit of $3.2 million on an investment of $40 million.

he said location is ideally suited for automobile industry. The city is located near a huge steel mill and a sea port which is less than 2,000 miles away from the Middle East, a potential market for luxury cars. I do not think any car manufacturer can pass up such a business opportunity.

This is just one example. A little research could reveal several other profitable capital investment opportunities.

I presume a substantial number of K-Staters will end up working and making critical decisions in the automobile industry. I hope they will not overlook the potential for corporate growth beyond America, especially in Asia.

Bush makes patriotism part of hate campaign

A trillion dollar national debt. Americans held hostage in the Middle East. Toxic waste in oceans, rivers and aquifers. Drugs and drug-related violence everywhere. AIDS cases on the rise with no cure in sight.

And in this election year, Republican presidential candidate George Bush would rather talk about the Pledge of Allegiance and incessantly criticize Democratic candidate Michael Dukakis for his veto of a Massachusetts bill which would have required teachers to lead their classes in the Pledge.

Nonetheless, Bush has no viable argument against Dukakis' veto. It was in accord with a landmark 1943 Supreme Court decision that declared such mandatory Pledge requirements to be a violation of first amendment freedoms of religion.

Yet Bush continues to defend Pledge requirements as if they were the last bastion of patriotism in America.

They aren't.

There are many other ways to encourage patriotism in the classroom that don't conflict with civil rights. Why doesn't Bush encourage teachers to lead their children in the "Star-Spangled Banner," "America the Beautiful," or a recitation of the preamble to the Constitution?

Because Bush isn't, though he claims to be, fighting for patriotism. He only wishes to insinuate that Dukakis, the immigrant's son from an ethnic neighborhood, is somehow less patriotic and thus, less American than him.

The Pledge issue is not a positive fight for patriotism, it is a negative attack of Dukakis. Bush hopes to make it a "hate issue" that will stir up enough anger in voters to keep Dukakis out of the White House.

Apparently George Bush thinks Americans prefer rote rituals like the Pledge to the living laws of the Constitution. Or maybe he sees Americans as people motivated by hate alone. Either way, they are not the kind of people one would expect to find in a "nation under God" that promises "liberty and justice for

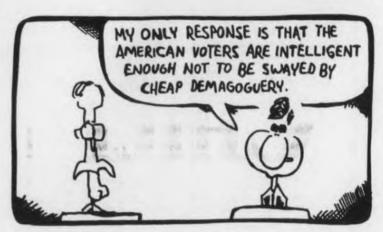

We know George Bush knows the words to the Pledge, but does he know what they mean?

City law ignorant

Even though my gripe is not with the K-State Police, I feel this is Collegian-worthy material. I have some things to share with my fellow students.

This Friday morning I'm going to the Manhattan Municipal Court, because I parked my car in my yard. And because Officer Williams saw it there. And because I didn't read an obscurity in the Manhattan Mercury proclaiming that very thing illegal. And obviously if one doesn't read the Mercury, one doesn't find out about the law. I'm aware of the old platitude, "Ignorance of the law is no excuse." Well, why did I have to talk to three different officers before I found one that knew about this law? Because of their ignorance? I guess they didn't read the Mercury either.

I'm not contesting the fact that we can't park our cars in our yards. Now that I know. I'm told it's the city's right of way. I'm told that it's not very pleasing to the eye. The law of aesthetics. Besides, I would always yield to any oncoming city vehicles while parked in my yard. I just want to know why Officer Williams couldn't have taken five more steps to my front door to warn me. "Mr. Bradley," he could have said, "if you don't move your car, I'm going to give you a ticket." That simple.

Instead he gives the ticket - to the tune of $10. I know, but it's the principle of the thing. I went to talk to Officer Williams. He told me it takes longer to explain these things than just write the ticket. I want to see the results of these studies he's taken. He chortled as he replied he was surprised I hadn't been ticketed before. Disgusted, I silently walked off. To a student, $10 is a lot of food, you know. To contest this ticket I'm supposed to post a $10 bond before my court date. How convenient. This way the city feels they'll get their money. Well, one can always stop payment on the check. Then they'll report me to the bad check agency, I'll develop a bad credit rating, end up in a small jail cell, write an

Women ignored

Once again a reporter from the Collegian has written an article about a women's issue and forgotten or ignored the women involved. In the recent article about the K-State Player's production of Extremities by William Mastrosimone, reporter Lisa Pfannenstiel offered an extremely one-sided viewpoint. In addition, Pfannienstiel displayed irresponsible journalistic practices by jeopardizing the safety of the women cast members of the play.

The article in the Sept. 9 Collegian centered on the male member of the cast, Mark Hetrick. This raises the question: Why weren't the other cast members interviewed? Shouldn't an article about a play concerning women's reactions to rape deal with the actresses' perspectives?

I am aware of the deadline constraints and of Pfannenstiel's efforts to allow the director. Charlotte MacFarland, to explain the author's purpose with the play. I feel, however, by not including the "victims" reaction, Pfannenstiel has reinforced the idea that women don't or can't really matter. Perhaps Pfannenstiel would feel differently if she would have bothered to interview Jennifer Hays, Penny Cullers or Kelli Wondra.

My second objection to the article is based on the fact that a quote from Hetrick was printed that could have endangered the safety of the women involved with this production.

As an interested party in K-State theater productions, I am grateful for the publicity by the Collegian. Next time, perhaps, you could send a reporter with more professionalism and concern for the welfare of the people she writes about.

Change drop/add

I agree completely with Audra Dietz's column on the nightmare of drop/add this year. I worked in the serials department of Farrell Library, located right next to the drop/add center. For the past two weeks I have observed hundreds of frustrated students wait in line for hours at a time, only to be informed when they reach the end that they need to have an appointment card, or, in some cases, a letter from an instructor to go through the drop/add process.

I don't think the University realizes how complicated this process is for students who have never gone through drop/add before. I think that the lines could be sped up a great deal by making a few simple changes.

First of all, signs should be put in the lobby of the library explaining to students where to get the drop/add forms, and which majors drop/add a much more pleasant experience require the forms to be signed by an adviser. for everyone concerned. These same signs could also explain when appointment cards are necessary and where they can be found. Other signs could explain the rules concerning the circumstances when a letter from an instructor is required.

I think that if students were informed of what they need to have in order to go through ble. All letters are subject to editing on the drop/add before getting in line they would be more apt to get it, thus reducing time and frustration for everyone involved.

I also think the lines would move faster if an entirely different line were established for picking up appointment cards.

I think that these few changes could make

Sales going well for Beach Boys concert

By The Collegian Staff

The first day of ticket sales for the Beach Boys concert at Bramlage Coliseum, went well, said Charlie Thomas, coliseum director.

"They were definitely a good choice for the first concert," said Beccka Pendarvis, freshman in elementary education. "(When we heard they were coming) my roommate and I jumped and looked at each other and said, 'We're going."

Pendarvis was one of about 50 students and Manhattan residents waiting in line for tickets at 10 a.m. Tuesday morning at the Union.

"I saw them about three weeks ago in Kansas City," said Wally Post, a Manhattan businessman. "(Now) I am buying tickets for my son."

The Beach Boys will perform at the official opening of the Bramlage Coliseum on Oct. 1 at 8 p.m.

Tickets went on sale Tuesday for $13 at the Union, Bramlage, Manhattan Town Center information desk, Middle Earth Records in Junction City and Information Tour and Travel at Ft. Riley.

According to ticket outlets approximately 1,300 tickets were sold Tuesday.

Thomas said potentially about 13,000 seats could be available for the concert, but that would include some seats to the back of the stage. A final decision has not been made on the exact number of seats that will available.

"I think starting out with the amount of advertising that we did that was a pretty good start," Thomas

Thomas also said that another major concert announcement will be made later this week.

Hurricane Gilbert, one of the strongest storms in history, roared toward Mexico's Yucatan Peninsula Tuesday with 175 mph winds after battering the Dominican Republic, Jamaica and the tiny Cayman

At least five people were killed by the hurricane Sunday in the Dominican Republic, according to civil defense officials, and there were uncomfirmed reports of at least 30 storm-related deaths Monday in Jamaica.

Annual canoe race called off

By The Collegian Staff

The 19th annual canoe race between residents in K-State and University of Kansas residence halls will not take place this fall because of low water levels at the event's site.

Housing officials are going to try to reschedule the race for sometime in April, said Kelli Nichols, staff assistant for the Department of Housing.

The Kansas River, the site of the event, is running low because of the lack of rain this summer, said a spokeswoman for the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers.

As of Tuesday morning, a guage of the river depth read 5.15 feet, said Paul Weidhaas, ranger for the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers. On the same day last year the depth was 6.71 feet, Weidhaas said.

The canoe race could be held now but the participants would have to walk the canoes over the shallow areas, she said.

Last year, there were about 30 teams from K-State and about four teams from KU participating in the all day event, said Stephanie Haub, president of the Association of Residence Halls.

"This year we are a lot more organized than we were last year and we were expecting a lot more people to be in the race," Nichols

The Birthplace

From the moment of birth, you can feel comfortable knowing that your baby is being cared for by one of The Birthplace's highly skilled and experienced nursery nurses. In fact, The Birthplace at Memorial Hospital offers the area's only Level II Neonatal Intensive Care Unit (NICU). Equipped with the latest in newborn technology, this nursery is designed to care for babies with special medical problems. Sophisticated monitoring equipment provides our staff with the best possible information about your baby's condition.

If your baby is in the NICU, you are encouraged to spend time holding, feeding, and caring for the baby within the unit. A guest room is available on the unit for parents wishing to stay overnight.

Even though your baby may not need our intensive care nursery, you can sleep like a baby just knowing it's there.

We would welcome the opportunity to meet you and to show you The Birthplace. Please call the Director of Education at (913) 776-3300, ext. 113, to schedule your personal tour.

Outside a barn, a gray-haired gentleman begins to set up "Harold's Bar-B-Q" stand. A middle-aged man, wearing faded jeans and cowboy boots, plops a dirty cap on top of his uncombed hair. He shaves with a battery-operated razor as he strolls by the stand.

New arrivals will bring the midway to life as they demand cotton candy, carnival rides and live entertainment. But for now, the fair remains uneventful to the average onlooker.

"Boy, I could sure go for a cup of coffee this morning. McDonald's even sounds pretty good," Chris Champagne, freshman in engineering, mutters to himself as he strolls through the almost-empty horse barn.

Today is the quarter horse show and he has a long day ahead of him, but Champagne is used to the long hours.

"I've been showing and riding as long as I can remember," he said. "I wasn't pushed into it or anything, though. I did it because I wanted to."

Champagne, who has been traveling almost every weekend since Christmas, admits it's difficult to balance horse shows and school. The experience has taught him to set his priorities, but the extra work is worth it, he said.

Champagne doesn't plan to miss much school, he said, but horse showing will remain a major part of his college life.

Champagne travels to several different states, but he said the horse show at the Kansas State Fair is special for him.

"I see people here I don't see any other time of year," he said.

Although the state fair is appealing to him, he said he's not attracted to the fair because of the displays or the rides, as most fairgoers may be.

"If they had the state fair without the rides, and they had the horse show, I'd still come," Champagne said.

At the other end of the fairgrounds, Guy Laflin, senior in animal sciences and industry, prepares for the Angus cattle show. "My brother and I show because it's like showing cattle is part of the family legacy. "Both my sisters, my brother and I have been finalists in the National Angus Association showmanship contest. It's just something we all do," he said.

Ladner said traveling and showing has taught him a sense of responsibility.

Unlike Laflin, Ladner isn't at the fair to promote his own herd. Ladner is known in the show business as a "professional fitter."

Champagne rides in the quarter horse show Sunday.

He grooms or "fits" cattle for the show ring. "I think that's what attracts me to this business. It's a challenge. You can make an average animal look great, or you can make a great animal look really bad.

"I enjoy this, but I don't do it for the fun of it. This puts me through school," Ladner area, he said. The 4-H Club hog show is an example of the fair's "unique" atmosphere. People of all ages swarm around a small pen, closely following their respective hogs. Among those watching is Shannon Williams, freshman in chemical engineering. "The competition is a lot stronger here than at other shows," Williams said.

Livestock, however, is not the only aspect of the state fair that prompts K-State students to get involved.

Donna Kerns, freshman in architecture and design, is displaying her 4-H food preservation and clothing projects at the fair. 'This year I'm exhibiting a wool coat and skirt I made to promote my sheep project," Kerns said.

"I used to be really skinny. Sewing was the only way I could get clothes to fit," Kerns said, adding that she did it more from necessity than to promote her sheep herd. There's more to the fair and 4-H than just the livestock projects, she said. Science areas, art skills and home economics are all represented.

These K-Staters' hard work seemed to pay off. Champagne placed high in all his events. Laflin's cattle won four of their five classes. Both of Williams' hogs placed in the top five in their classes, and Kerns received a blue ribbon for her clothing project.

WASHINGTON — President Reagan signed legislation Tuesday putting new enforcement teeth in the open-housing law Congress passed in the wake of Martin Luther King Jr.'s 1968 assassination.

Standing with members of Congress in the White House Rose Garden, Reagan hailed the newly enacted bill as "the most important civil rights legislation in 20 years."

Singling out Rep. John Lewis, rights leader's "I Have a Dream" speech in 1963, the president said the legislation "has brought us one step closer to realizing Martin Luther King's dream."

The measure, which was passed overwhelmingly by the House and Senate, extends antidiscrimination protections to the handicapped and to families with children. It also empowers the federal government - for the first and the inability of the government

Under the open-housing provision of the Civil Rights Act of 1968, the government was given only a mediating role in housing discrimination disputes.

"Discrimination is particularly tragic when it means a family is refused housing near good schools, a good job or simply in a better neighborhood to raise children," D-Ga., who had accompanied Reagan said. "This bill is the pro-King to Washington for the civil duct of years of bipartisan work, and repairs a significant defect in civil rights law."

He said that while the 1968 law was well-intentioned, "it lacked teeth. Its concilation provisions were ineffective when used."

Reagan said that he and Housing Secretary Samuel Pierce had "devoted eight years" to seeking improvements in the 1968 law, "to redress the absence of penalties

> Under the bill he signed Tuesday, the Department of Housing and Urban Development will have authority to initiate enforcement actions and to seek penalties against individuals, businesses or organizations that discriminate on the basis of race, color, sex or national origin in the sale, rental or financing of housing.

It authorizes civil penalties, which could be recommended following an agency administrative enforcement process, of up to $10,000 or a first offense, $25,000 for a second and up to $50,000 for a Exalt in a celebration of Epicurean extravagance.

Scale the heights of gustatory pleasure. Surrender to your wildest cravings. If this sounds like a party, it is. A chocolate party, officially the Chocoholic Frolic, is the kick-off event for McCain Auditorium's upcoming season.

More than 60 sponsors from the Manhattan community, who each contributed $100, will prepare 100 chocolates for the Sept. 22 event.

Chocolate almond lace, chocolate pecan puffs, chocolate creme de menthe mini-brownies, chocolate fondue with fresh fruit and chocolate coffees donated by Butterfields, will be in the lobby of McCain for participants to indulge.

This is the first season for the Chocoholic Frolic. "Our main goal in this project is to Auditorium," said Karen Rogers, chairperson for the event.

In the past, the only funding McCain received was from grants, ticket sales and fund raising.

"The grants are in great demand and ticket sales cannot cover what it costs to bring quality performances to the area," Rogers said. "So fundraising events are sought to raise the money that it takes to keep the qual-

"Without the necessary support we will not be able to have musicals, dance companies or orchestras in this area," Rogers said.

The Chocoholic Frolic is designed to make the entire Manhattan, Junction City and Ft. Riley area feel comfortable in McCain and to make them excited about what is happening there, Rogers added.

K-State's best start since 1978

Volleyball team downs Shocks

'K-State's Lynda Harshbarger gives for a ball in the Wildcats' five-game win Tuesday against Wichita State. The 'Cats, 7-0, are off to their best start since the 1978 season.

Though they were pushed to five games for the first time this season, the Wildcats pulled out a 12-15, 13-15, 15-6, 15-6, 15-3 win Tuesday against Wichita State University in Ahearn.

An estimated crowd of 400 watched the two-hour marathon as the 'Cats improved their record to 7-0 — the team's best start since 1978.

"From a coaching perspective, it feels great. I'm sure from a player's perspective it felt wonderful to feel this challenge," coach Scott Nelson said. "I would hope we wouldn't be in a position of being down 0-2 very often and have to win three in a row to win a match."

Nelson said the win, no doubt, was the toughest of the season.

"It's got to affect our confidence. Anytime you're down 2-0, and not really playing well, and yet you can put it together mentally, keep calm, continue to execute and work your way back into the game, you've got to be doing something right," he said.

Although the 'Cats dropped the first two games to their interstate rivals, Nelson said he noticed a "momentum shift" in the second game.

"We were down 12-4 at one point, and the next (thing I knew) we were putting out a good effort ... and ended up losing the game by only two points," he said.

Nelson also had a pep talk with his squad before the third game started. It must have worked as K-State outscored the Shockers 45-15 during the next three games.

"We talked about raising our intensity level, maintaining it, and letting it snowball into the third game and we did that. It even seemed like it snowballed into the fourth game," Nelson said.

The fifth game stayed close for the first few points, then Lynda Harashbarger came on strong with several key kills. Harshbarger finished the game with a team-high 19 kills.

Nelson said K-State may have had a slight letdown after winning the Northern Illinois University Invitational last weekend.

"I think it is maybe a combination of we weren't at an optimum playing level during the first two games combined with Wichita State coming in relaxed and playing good aggressive volleyball," Nelson said.

K-State outside hitter Shawnee Call, who had 15 kills and nine total assists against WSU, was named Tuesday as the Big Eight Conference's player of the week due to her efforts last weekend in the sweep of the tournament at the Northern Illinois tournament.

And, for the first time in K-State volleyball history, the 'Cats are ranked. They are ranked eighth in the Mideast Region of the Tachikara Coaches' Poll. Also ranked in the conference are Nebraska (No. 1) and Oklahoma (No. 4).

K-State graduate Helen Bundy, now an assistant for WSU, returned to Ahearn Field House Tuesday when the Shockers played the 'Cats.

Bundy makes return

By Mike May Sports Writer

Helen Bundy is a familiar face at courtside of K-State volleyball matches. However, it is unusual to see her on the opponent's bench.

Bundy, a four-year letterwinner in volleyball and holder of eight K-State records, returned to K-State Tuesday night after a two-year absence.

She has been serving as a graduate assistant coach for The Wichita State University since she left K-State. Her return was to watch the Shockers play at Ahearn Field House.

"I felt a little uncomfortable about coming back," Bundy said. "I wanted both teams to play well."

Bundy holds K-State career marks for block assists (264), solo blocks (104) and total blocks (368). In addition, she holds single-season records for block assists (105), solo blocks (44), total blocks (138), and blocks per game average (1.35). Her mark of 11 block assists in a five-game match still stands as well.

Bundy, who is pursuing her master's degree at WSU, hopes to either get into elementary education or pursue her fledgling coaching career.

"I'm still not sure which I want to do. I wanted to see what coaching was like," she said.

Bundy had mixed emotions when the 'Cats rallied from two games down to win their seventh consecutive match.

"I expect Kansas State to do a lot of good things this year," she said. "I think they're fighting Nebraska to be tops in the Big Eight (Conference)."

As for Bundy's Wichita State squad?

"We are improving with every match. We have a lot of games left to play, and we'll get better before the season ends."

Bundy's influence may already be affecting Wichita State. The Shockers are 5-5 this year after winning only six matches in 29 tries a year ago.

Elementary education may have to wait.

Watson returns to practice

Redshirt-sophomore quarterback Paul Watson returned to practice in full pads today, and K-State coach Stan Parrish said it's possible he might play this week.

Watson, the projected starter who injured his right shoulder during an preseason scrimmage, didn't agree.

"In my opinion, I don't think I'll play," Watson said. "My shoulder's coming along a lot better, and in my mind I'm ready to go, but my body isn't cooperating."

Watson said a strength test on the shoulder earlier this week showed it was 80-percent healthy.

Junior defensive back Tyreese Herds is also questionable for Saturday's game because of a shoulder injury.

Rutgers celebrates victory

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — The limousine was waiting at the airport for Rutgers coach Dick Anderson and so was the television film crew.

A guest appearance on national television followed a few hours later, while telephone calls from long-lost friends came the following day.

Life at Rutgers — for at least a week — changed dramatically for Anderson with the Scarlet Knights' 17-13 victory
Saturday over then-No. 15 Michigan State, a win that quite easily ranks among the biggest in the school's long football

"For at least one day we're bigger than (Bruce) Springsteen in the state of New Jersey," Anderson said in ending an interview with CBS-TV Saturday night, according to Kevin Mac-Connell, the school's sports information director.

More NFL players suspended

NEW YORK — Safety Antonio Gibson of the New Orleans Saints and tackle Leonard Mitchell of the Atlanta Falcons were suspended Tuesday by the NFL for violating the league's substance abuse policy.

The suspensions of Gibson and Mitchell bring to 19 the number of NFL players cited for violating the league's drug policy. Seven players have completed 30-day suspensions and are back with their teams.

DeBerg to start against Broncos

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Steve DeBerg will replace Bill Kenney at quarterback Sunday as one of several changes the winless Kansas City Chiefs are planning for the Denver Broncos.

"I don't know if he gives us any dimension that we've been missing," head coach Frank Gansz said Tuesday. "I just think it's in the best interest of our team right now to make a change at quarterback. There are always a number of reasons why an offense is faltering."

Quarterback is not the only position where the Chiefs have been lacking in losses to Cleveland and Seattle. Gansz said Larry Moriarty will replace James Saxon at fullback, Irv Eatman will start ahead of David Lutz at left tackle and Louis Cooper will replace Jack Del Rio at left outside linebacker. In addition, rookie Kevin Porter will spell the injured Lloyd Burruss at strong safety.

"I think Lloyd will take Kevin under his wing and help him along this week," Gansz said.

After opening with a 6-3 loss to the Browns, the Chiefs suffered a 31-10 loss last week at Seattle in which DeBerg played the second half and hit 22 of 38 passes for 244 yards and one touchdown. Chiefs' quarterbacks were sacked six times as the Seahawks exploited a inconsistent offensive line.

"The quarterback is not a magic man," Gansz said. "If he doesn't get protection, he's not going to be effective. It's a combination of factors. We need to execute our offensive system and our fundamentals. Steve has a great head on his shoulders. I think there'll be very good chemistry. I'm hoping this will give us a boost, a lift to tie it all together. You can put two active chemicals together and nothing happens. But you add a little catalyst, and something happens. That's what we're hoping for."

DeBerg came to the Chiefs in a trade this year after making Tampa Bay his latest stop in a 12-year professional career. Previously, DeBerg has found himself playing behind Joe Montana at San Francisco, John Elway at Denver and Vinny Testeverde at Tampa.

"This means the next quarterback here will be the next Joe Namath," DeBerg joked after hearing he had been made No. 1 quarterback. "It's almost guaranteed, looking back over my career. I expect it."

Yes, Virginia, the 'Cats can win

Mid-Week Commentary

Two possibly beatable teams in the next two games.

That's the outlook for K-State's football team. If the Wildcats treat the next two games like they have similar situations the past couple of years, this equals a pair of losses.

But if the 'Cats can treat the past as being exactly what it is — the past, K-State may have its first football victory since beating KU 29-12 midway through the 1986 season. As it stands, the winless streak is at 18 games and holding.

Without question, Saturday's opponent Tulane is very beatable, as is Louisiana Tech, K-State's homecoming foe Oct. 1. Iowa State drubbed Tulane 30-13 last week and the Cyclones are no better than a mediocre team in the Big Eight Conference. Plus, the game is on the road at New Orleans. Seemingly a minus on the surface, I think playing at the Louisiana Superdome will be a plus.

Psychologically, playing on the road should be beneficial. The team will be playing for themselves, not the fans. Tulane doesn't draw big

Last week's effort against Iowa was a solid one, 45-10 drubbing and five interceptions aside. The Hawkeyes are a potential top-10 team and K-State gave them some trouble at times. But, K-State also played well in a 38-10 loss to Iowa at Iowa City last year, only to lose the next week at home to Tulsa, another beatable opponent.

How will K-State react to playing a game against someone it has a chance to beat this time? You make the call

The potential for a K-State win is better this week than it has been at any time since the fateful tie against KU last year. The 'Cats have some semblance of momentum going now and Tulane lost big last week to a team it was supposed to beat.

A big key is the possible return of the highly-touted redshirt Paul Watson at quarterback for K-State. Watson practiced for the first time in recent weeks Tuesday night and may be ready to go Saturday. Expecting Watson to be a savior, however, isn't advisable for K-State fans. Remember, talented or not, Watson has never taken a snap in a college game. The 'Cats may well pass 50 times Saturday. And with receivers like Greg Washington and Mark Austin, why not? Starting quarterback Carl Straw passed for 496 yards last week. Problem was, 224 came on Iowa interception returns and Parrish was critical of Straw after the game. If Watson can't play Saturday, Chris Cobb, who completed three of four

Legislative approval needed for prisons

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA - The state Department of Corrections is preparing to seek legislative approval to build two new state prisons, which could cost the state as much as $110 million.

A consulting firm hired by the agency unveiled a rough version of the contruction plan at a meeting Tuesday of a special government task force on prison overcrowding. Corrections Secretary Roger Endell said he plans to present the proposal to two legislative committees next week, but he acknowleged he has not yet discussed it with Gov. Mike Hayden.

A spokesman for the consulting firm also spent much of the meeting of the Coordinating Council on Criminal Justice outlining a report the Department of Corrections plans to use to justify its request for the new prison construction.

"It becomes an issue of credibility and cost," Endell said after the meeting. "If the cost is too great, it's apparent to me they must change policy and cut them loose."

The proposal, as developed for the department by Carter Goble Associates, a Columbia, S.C., firm specializing in corrections issues, calls for building two prisons, each with 752 beds. The prisons would be built so they could be expanded in the future to have 1,344 beds each.

The firm estimates that construction of each would cost $43.1 million, with site development, security fences and various fees increasing it to an estimated $55.2 million for each prison. It would cost about $13.3 million annually to operate each prison, which would employ about 400 people each.

However, Endell and Bob Goble, a spokesman for the firm, said the estimates were rough.

"It's my experience that as you get into these projects, the cost goes down," Endell said. "I think it will come down incrementally, but not in large increments."

During the 1988 Legislature, Endell proposed building one or two prisons with 1,200 new beds at a cost to the state of as much as $62 million - after he had originally estimated the top cost at $77.9 million.

However, lawmakers balked at the cost and appropriated $750,000 for planning the construction of a new prison. Some said the Legislature should look at changing sentencing laws and parole policies.

Collegiate 4-H upholds tradition

Members of the oldest organization on campus, K-State's Collegiate 4-H club, continue to carry on the activities of the organization.

This week, Collegiate 4-H'ers continue one of their customs by packaging hot dogs and pouring cold drinks in a concession stand at the Kansas State Fair.

The food stand is the club's primary source of income and a project it has had for a long time, said Steve Fisher, Collegiate 4-H adviser for 10 years.

The club was formed in 1927 with the help of Francis Farrell, who was K-State's president at the time. It was first organized to enable past 4-H club members to become better acquainted with one

Now, club members often judge 4-H events and help train county 4-H youth leaders, Fisher said.

"We're a service and social organization," said Nancy Deckert, president of Collegiate 4-H and junior in elementary education. "We have fun while doing activities for the community," she said.

"The social aspect draws kids into the club. It's like being reunited with all of those people you've seen at camps and other 4-H experiences," Deckert said. "However, you don't have to have been in 4-H to join."

K-State's Collegiate 4-H chapter is one of about 60 college 4-H chapters in the nation.

Pesticide gives off odd odor

By The Collegian Staff

Students aware of a strange garlic-onion aroma emanating from the Anderson Hall region of campus are smelling a pesticide University Physical Facilities workers are using to kill lawn grubworms.

The odd smell is produced by the chemical Mocap, an insecticide commonly used for grounds maintenance, said Tom Lee, physical plant supervisor. -

Monday morning the grounds department applied a second application of the grubworm pesticide to some of the lawns surrounding the Anderson Hall area of campus, Lee said. This was the second application of the pesticide in the last three weeks, he said.

ebanese hijacker on trial

Hurricane devastates Caribbean; 19 killed

By The Associated Press

CANCUN, Mexico — Hurricane Gilbert, one of the strongest storms ever, slammed into the Yucatan Peninsula Wednesday and leveled thatched homes, tore off roofs, uprooted trees and cut off the Caribbean resorts of Cancun and Cozumel.

Looters roamed the streets of Cancun, stealing from stores whose windows were blown away. Huge waves battered the beach resorts and thousands were evacuated. Despite the intensity of the onslaught and the ensuing heavy flooding, officials reported only two minor injuries.

The storm killed 19 people in Jamaica and five in the Dominican Republic before moving west to Mexico. Prime Minister Edward said all their vessels were secure. Seaga of Jamaica said Wednesday the storm destroyed an estimated 100,000 of Jamaica's 500,000 homes when it throttled the island Monday.

The Jamaican Embassy reported earlier that 500,000 of the nation's 2.3 million people were homeless. peninsula.

In Cancun, amateur radio operators said an oil tanker from the fleet of the government oil monopoly Pemex, the Lazaro Cardenas, had run aground on the beach in the Cancun hotel zone. Pemex officials however

Army officials in Mexico City said about 35,000 people were evacuated from Cancun, but Cancun Mayor Jose Sanchez Zapata said about 11,000 fled. Thousands of evacuations were reported elsewhere in the Ham radio operators around Cancun said Gilbert knocked down a radio and television communications tower, uprooted trees and blew the roofs off buildings.

Floods prevented officials from reaching the hotel zone in Cancun and there were no relief efforts under way by late Wednesday. Shelters had and power was out.

Bands of youths roamed the streets of Cancun Wednesday, looting stores with shattered windows, said Alfredo Moro Sanchez, investigative coordinator of the Quintana Roo state judicial police.

He said he asked for army troops to halt the looting but none had arrived by late Wednesday.

About 150 tourists took refuge at the Cancun city hall. Honeymooner Sheila Fournier of Long Island said she and her husband, Pete, had been evacuated from the Villas Playa Hotel.

"It had an ocean-front view which is now washed away," she said.

Hayden: rural life needs lift

By The Associated Press

OSKALOOSA - With the Jefferson County Courthouse in the backdrop, Gov. Mike Hayden said Wednesday it is time state government give small communities the attention they deserve.

Surrounded by more than 150 students from both the Oskaloosa High School and Junior High School, Hayden accepted a 72-page report from the Governor's Task Force on the Future of Rural Communities.

The report's recommendations included improving health care in small towns and establishing a Rural Assistance Center to coordinate all rural development programs.

"This report is about your future," Hayden told the students who were allowed to leave school for an hour to hear the governor speak on the courthouse lawn. "It is about you and what future you might have in rural areas and small communities as we go into the 21st Century."

Hayden, one of seven children who grew up in Atwood, said he wants young people to have a choice of staying in small communities, rather than being forced to move to cities because there were no jobs

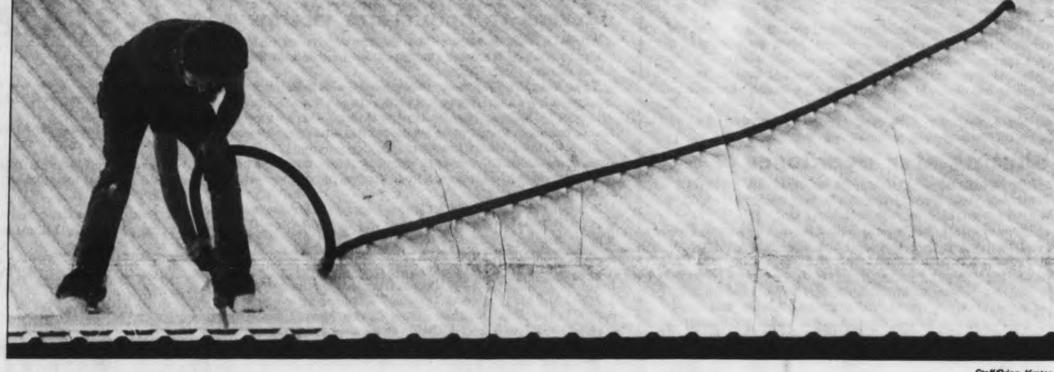

Hayden said he accepted the report at Oskaloosa, with a population of about 1,100, because it typified small-town Kansas.

"It exemplifies some the successes small towns have had in economic development and job creation," Hayden said. "It also knows of the problems."

The 20-member task force studied the problems facing rural communities for eight months before presenting its report to the governor.

"The needs of small towns are very much the same, whether they are in eastern Kansas or western Kansas, whether in the north or in the south," Hayden said.

The task force urged passage of a constitutional amendment that would put caps on awards for non-economic damages for medical malpractice

Police end hostage drama; shootout kills 3 hijackers

By The Associated Press

MASERU, Lesotho - South African police killed three hijackers and arrested the fourth in a shootout Wednesday night that ended a hostage drama in which the gunmen seized a bus carrying 71 pilgrims headed to see the pope, South African officials said.

One of the hostages, a young woman, was killed, and 11 passengers were injured, the officials said.

The report of the shootout came from South African police headquarters. Lesotho's military government had requested South African help in handling the hijacking. Police said the shootout occurred when the hijackers tried to drive the bus through the closed gates of the British High Commission in Maseru.

The hijackers began shooting, and South African officers returned fire.

Police said the casualties among the hostages were "apparently caused by the wild firing of the hijackers." They said no policemen were injured.

The shooting broke out about 20 minutes after Pope John Paul II arrived in Maseru, eight hours behind schedule. The hijackers earlier had demanded to meet with the pope and Lesotho's king, Moshoeshoe II, a government official said.

After nightfall, gunfire was heard at the site where the bus was parked, and flares lit up the sky. Reporters were blocked from getting close enough to the scene to determine what was happening but saw ambulances take bloodied victims to a hospital.

Police ordered journalists at the scene to disperse and then chased them away with whips. The bus was hijacked Tuesday night en route to Maseru.

Earlier Wednesday, bad weather forced the pope's plane to land in Johannesburg, South Africa, where he met Foreign Minister Pik Botha at the airport and was briefed about the hijacking.

The pope then journeyed overland to Lesotho.

Before the shootout, helicopters and armed cars blanketed central Maseru as 100 armed soldiers and police set up roadblocks and kept spectators at least four blocks from the bus, parked outside the British High Commission.

One man escaped earlier today from the bus, said Tom Thabane, secretary for Lesotho's six-man military council.

Thabane said the hijackers were members of the dissident Lesotho Liberation Army. The Lesotho Liberation Army had been opposed to the leftist government of the late Prime Minister Leabua Jonathan. A number of bombings and killings were attributed to the group, which reportedly had South African

Deficit improves, lowest since 1984

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - The U.S. merchandise trade deficit showed the biggest improvement in almost six years in July, a dramatic 28 percent narrowing that reflected a big decline in Americans' appetite for foreign goods, the government reported Wednesday.

The Commerce Department said the difference between what the United States imports and what it sells abroad shrank to $9.53 billion in July, down $3.6 billion from a June deficit of $13.22 billion.

The Reagan administration lost no time hailing the huge decline as proof that the administration's economic strategy of fighting soaring trade deficits with a devaluation of the dollar was paying

In a speech in Cape Girardeau,

Mo., President Reagan called the trade figures "very good" news that proved that "when America goes into the market to compete, we play to win."

The 28 percent June-to-July decrease was the biggest monthly improvement since a 35.7 percent narrowing in September 1982 and gave the country the lowest overall imbalance since December 1984, when the deficit was $8 billion.

While the trade deficit has been showing improvement for most of this year, the gains have all been on the export side, reflecting the fact that the weaker dollar has made American products competitive once again on overseas markets.

Imports, however, had remained at stubbornly high levels. Analysts said this made the July drop particularly encouraging.

KSU Vietnam Memorial to at new location built

Students honored by site

By Becky Jones Collegian Reporter

"A memorial in memory of those Kansas State University students who made the ultimate sacrifice by giving their lives in the service of their country in Vietnam."

This will be the inscription printed on a wall of the KSU Vietnam Memorial, which will be located east of All Faiths Chapel in an area of trees. The original site was north of Nichols Hall. The new site was suggested by Facilities Management and the Campus Development

"They felt that in the trees it was a more quiet, serene area," said Capt. John Taglieri, adviser for the KSU Arnold Air Society and adviser to the KSU Vietnam Memorial Committee. "It's a nice, quiet place for folks to contemplate. Taglieri said they hope to have a site dedication or ground breaking ceremony for the memorial in conjunction with a Veteran's Day ceremony Nov. 11. The ceremony will be conducted by K-State's Army and Air Force ROTC groups.

He said they hope to complete the entire structure by the end of the spring semester.

Taglieri said $20,000 is needed to complete the memorial, but only $13,000 has been raised. He said the lack of funds is due to the fact that until last month, plans for the memorial were tentative.

"I think folks were leery of giving money if it wasn't a sure thing,' Taglieri said. "I think when we can actually move some dirt, that will help our fund raising." He said he is confident enough money can be raised by spring.

Promotional activities are planned for this fall, with the main emphasis during the week of Nov. 7-11.

"That will be a major time frame for us," said Bill Arck, director of Alcohol and Other Drug Education Services and adviser to the KSU Vietnam Memorial Committee.

The memorial was designed by Scott Enns, a K-State graduate who is now an architect in Wichita. His model for the memorial was chosen in a design contest the memorial committee conducted in 1987.

The memorial will be 24 feet in diameter, surrounded by two walls ■ See MEMORIAL, Page 14

The site for the KSU Vietnam Memorial will be east of All Faiths Chapel. Only $13,000 has been collected to build the memorial.

BRIEFLY ACROSS NATION

U.N. grateful for money

UNITED NATIONS - Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar thanked the United States on Wednesday for pledging to pay hundreds of millions of dollars in back dues, but he said the world body still faces long-term fiscal problems.

President Reagan announced Tuesday he is releasing $188 million in dues for the current and next fiscal year.

The White House told the State Department to work out a "multiyear" plan to repay $520 million more in overdue assessments to the U.N. budget and to the World Health Organization and Food and Agriculture Organization.

Assistant Secretary of State John Whitehead and Herbert S. Okun, the second-ranking diplomat at the U.S. Mission to the United Nations, will give the secretary-general a check for $15 million Wednesday afternoon as a first payment, said U.S. Mission spokeswoman Anne Stoddard.

"Of course, it has been a tremendous relief for me," Perez de Cuellar said in an interview.

"We consider that it was a very positive development. I am grateful for the understanding of the president and his staff. ... But it is important to understand that we are not completely off the hook," said the secretary-general.

When asked if the long efforts to persuade the United States to pay its dues sapped the time of his staff and detracted from the U.N.'s peacekeeping activities, Perez de Cuellar replied: "All our activities have a price."

Chemical weaponry possible

WASHINGTON - The State Department said Wednesday it has evidence that Libya has acquired a chemical weapons production capability and is on the verge of a full-scale production Department spokesman Charles Redman called this "a particularly worrisome development" in light of Libya's record of state-sponsored terrorism in many global troublespots.

He said the kinds of chemicals that are useful in producing chemical weapons are available on the world market. He called on nations that may be making contributions to the Libyan program to halt such activity.

Redman said the United States has been investigating the matter for some time but substantiated the alleged Libyan activities only recently. He provided no information on type of weapons Libya is developing nor did he say how U.S. officials learned of the operations.

His statement came less than a week after he accused Iraq of using chemical weapons against Kurdish rebels in defiance of a 1925 international protocol barring use of such weapons.

He said Wednesday that the use of chemical weapons by both Iran and Iraq had set a "dangerous precedent" for the Middle East as a whole.

Redman noted that there were reports last year that Libya had used chemical weapons in its war with Chad.

Skating star overdoses

LOS ANGELES — Ex-Olympian ice skater Tai Babilonia, despondent about recent performances, was hospitalized Wednesday after overdosing on pills, authorities said.

Paramedics took Balilonia at 9:30 a.m. to Cedars-Sinai Medical Center, where she was treated and released almost four hours later in good condition, hospital spokeswonan Paula Correia said.

The type of pills taken and other details weren't disclosed. "I am not at liberty to discuss the treatment," Correia said.

The 28-year-old skating star had earlier called her manager to say she was unhappy about recent performances and that she had taken a large amount of pills, said Bill Frio, a police spokesman.

Launch date may be delayed

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. - NASA said Wednesday it was delaying setting a launch date for the first post-Challenger space shuttle flight because of the possibility that Hurricane Gilbert could disrupt operations at the flight control center in Houston.

Also cited was uncertainty about a small hydrogen leak detected in the shuttle's main engine propulsion system, a problem not considered serious.

Rear Adm. Richard Truly, NASA's associate administrator for space flight, said the plan is still to launch in the last week in September, but a firm date would not be set before Friday.

The hurricane, which is churning in the Gulf of Mexico with winds up to 160 mph, is on a course that could possibly take it to the Texas coast near Houston. NASA's Johnson Space Center is located south of Houston, 30 miles inland from the gulf.

"We don't know where the hurricane is going, but we thought it best to wait a day or so, or whatever it takes to make a decision," Truly said.

BRIEFLY THE REGION

Army denies asbestos threat

FORT RILEY - A union complains that asbestos is being improperly removed during renovation of the hospital at Fort Riley, but the Army denies any threat.

Local 77 of the Sheet Metal Workers International Association said that patients in the maternity ward and elsewhere at Irwin Army Community Hospital are being exposed to asbestos, as are construction workers and Fort Riley residents. Fort Riley officials said Tuesday that asbestos removal is not posing any danger to hospital patients. "The maternity ward has been moved to an area of the hospital that has been completely renovated and is free of asbestos," said Arzula Villery, acting public affairs officer at the post. "There was no asbestos hazard at the previous location of the maternity ward." The U.S. Army Corps of Engineers contracted construction crews to remodel the hospital and other buildings, and to remove asbestos where it was found, said Mike Istas, office engineer for the corps. About six Corps of Engineers projects now under way at Fort Riley involve asbestos removal, Istas said, adding he expects future projects will also involve asbestos.

Kansans to help storm victims

WICHITA - A dozen Red Cross disaster workers from Kansas headed to Texas on Wednesday to help out in case Hurricane Gilbert moves into the Lone Star state.

A new Emergency Response Vehicle packed with food, juices and radio gear left Wichita driven by Red Cross volunteer Ruthie Hughes of Arkansas City. She was bound for San Antonio to help prepare for mass feeding operations in case the storm headed into Texas from Mexico.

About 100 Red Cross staff members and volunteers from 17 Midwest states headed to Gulf Coast states, including at least three volunteer nurses from the Wichita area and a Red Cross van carrying two volunteers from Coffeyville.

"I think it's good that people who live in Kansas and are not normally affected by these hurricanes are on their way to help," said Colleen Wooley, director of communications for the Red Cross' Midway-Kansas Chapter in Wichita.

Some residents of Wichita visiting Mexico took shelter from the hurricane as it passed over the Yucatan Peninsula on Wednesd

Mayor Sheldon Kamen and 11 other Wichita residents, who were part of a sister cities delegation visiting Cancun, Mexico, this week, were believed to have taken shelter in archaeological ruins that are a 3-hour drive inland from the coastal resort.

The group was expected to return to Wichita on Sunday.

Education boards downplay issues

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA - The two boards that govern education in the state indicated Wednesday that they will not actively push proposals to restrict admission to state universities and to bring Washburn University of Topeka into the state university system.

Members of the State Board of Education said a majority of the board supports making Washburn a state university, but that the issue is not a top priority. Mcmbers of the State Board of Regents said they would not oppose the change if the Legislature voted to make it.

The regents also expressed their support of ending the state's long-standing policy of open admissions to its universities, but they told members of the Board of Education that they will work first on budget issues. Board of Education members opposed the plan in the past and remained cool to it Wednesday.

Thus, neither the board nor the regents appeared ready to lobby strongly for two proposals that floundered during the 1988 Legislature. Instead, they indicated their main focus will be on increasing state support of education.

"Whatever happens, we're going to continue to work with you," said Regents Chairman Richard Dodderidge of Mission

For the past several years, legislators have debated whether to give the regents control over Washburn, the only municipal university in the state. Gov. Mike Hayden supports the idea, saying Washburn as a university should be under the control of the regents, who govern the six state universities.

However, the proposal raises other sticky questions over the governance of higher education such as who should have authority over the state's 19 community colleges and 14 area vocational-technical schools.

The Board of Education now has oversight authority over community colleges.

Few concerned with fatty

By Sarah Kobs Collegian Reporter

Of the thousands of students who daily move their trays through the Union cafeteria, only a few are concerned about the nutritional value or the fat content of the food they consume.

"Fat should be a concern, but not everyone is concerned about it," said Malley Sisson, food service director at the Union.

Sisson said the Union dieticians plan menus that offer "popular, nutritious, affordable food that is readily available." She said the most popular items are pizza, Mexican food, grilled foods, hot line entrees, soups and salads.

The most popular items are high in fat, but the Union offers alternatives for those wanting a low-fat meal. Barb Depew, production dietician at the Union, said she had received requests in the past for low-calorie salad dressings, a larger salad bar, and low-sodium vegetarian soups.

When suggestions are made, the staff tries to incorporate the new ideas into the menu. Depew said most of the requests are for vegetarian dishes or low-sugar desserts for diabetics.

"Only a few requests are for lowfat foods. In fact, most people aren't even concerned about the nutritional content of food until it effects their health," Depew said. "It should be up to the customers to choose low-fat foods, if that is what they want, because we offer the choices."

The Union tries to eliminate some fat by steaming almost all of their vegetables and by not adding butter. They also trim fat from cuts of meat.

Denise Wiseman, administrative dietician for Derby, Kramer, and Boyd Food Centers said the popularity of an item is the main criteria when planning menus for residence halls. She said she tries to plan a balanced menu around the main entree and avoids having two fried foods at the same meal.

Food Committee is a group of elected hall residents who meet monthly with the dieticians to give suggestions on meal planning.

"Occasionally we have requests for more baked fish instead of fried, but most requests are for foods that are high in fat, like biscuits and gravy or more french fries in the hamburger line. People don't seem to be worried about the fat content," Wiseman said.

The menu she prepares is critiqued by a committee of dieticians. Low fat alternatives are offered at every meal, but it is up to the student to make the choices.

"A person on a low-fat or lowcholesterol diet would do fine on our menu with only a few exceptions," Wiseman said. "There are a few students who are (on diets) and we want to help them out. We offer fresh fruit at lunch and a salad bar at supper."

They also use tuna packed in water, canned fruit in light syrup, and, at residents' request, have stopped adding margarine to vegetables.

"College students are becoming more informed about nutrition. Therefore, they are gradually learning to modify their intake of high-fat foods," Wiseman said. "People won't want to give up high-fat foods like croissants and cheese, but at least they are learning to decrease their consumption."

Nutrition is emphasized at the food centers by keeping an approximate calorie count of the menu posted along with various nutritional information.

'We post information on caffeine, freshman ten, exercise and even things like dental hygiene," she said. "During March, which is National Nutritional Month, we use a theme like 'Sports and Exercise."

"We inform students about target heart rate, the number of calories they burn by exercising, good and bad cholesterol and other facts that interest them."

She said she would like eventually to develop a computer program for a nutritional breakdown of foods they

"We use calorie counts, but I think the students are going to want to know how many grams of fat, sodium, and cholesterol they are consuming," Wiseman said.

Smokeless cigarette may end smoker segregation

hich is worse — being a nonsmoker and being confined in a small enclosure with a smoker who is puffing clouds of noxious, cancercausing smoke, or being a smoker and being segregated from the rest of society so that you won't accidentally offend anyone?

Non-smokers certainly have the right to breathe fresh air. (Perhaps they should be quibbling with the Environmental Protection Agency over air pollution instead.) Smokers. however, claim to have an equal right to indulge their habit, which not so many years ago was considered sophisticated and classy. It is still being promoted each year with millions of dollars of advertising money.

The two sides have made compromises. Smokers still may smoke — in the back of restaurants, union staterooms and offices, far from the rest of civilization. Meanwhile, some non-smokers have been working on legislation to keep smokers in their places or, preferably, in no place at all.

Time has been spent, tempers have flared, and today, despite the compromises, both groups still aren't happy. Smokers are often made to feel like criminals, as non-smokers give them the evil eye and cough so loudly they seem to be in danger of losing a lung. They have also suffered from enormous amounts of bad press as the problem of smoking fumes has been discussed in every type of media possible.

Meanwhile, non-smokers feel unprotected by society since all of these evil noxious cigarette fumes are wafting about. And thanks to the Surgeon General, everyone knows that "smoking by pregnant women may result in fetal injury, premature birth and low birth weight," not to mention that "smoking causes lung cancer, heart disease, emphysema and may complicate pregnancy."

Many non-smokers are outraged that these huffers and puffers are allowed to contaminate others' bodies with sidestream smoke, which is just as dangerous as smoking.

There is, however, if not a solution to the problem, at least an answer that will clear the air between the two parties.

"Smokeless" cigarettes. A new cigarette developed by the R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. is being hailed as a smokeless cigarette, although R.J. Reynolds says the term "smokeless" is a misnomer. They refer to it as a cleaner cigarette.

Regardless, the new cigarette, Premier, creates almost no sidestream smoke, no ashes, no smell, and has less nicotine than 97 percent of all brands on the market. It works Commentary by lighting a tube in the middle of the cigarette, which is surrounded by tobacco. The tobacco gets hot but does not burn, eliminating ashes and smoke.

hat more could non-smokers want? They will no longer have their bodies polluted by the dreaded sidestream smoke, there will no longer be nasty dirty ashes strewn about, and they will no longer have to choke back coughs when someone lights a cigarette in their presence.

Meanwhile, smokers can once again smoke in public, and the tobacco company will still have a market for its product. Everyone should be happy.

costs a little more than other cigarettes - about 30 cents more per pack - and has been described as tasting like "hot air" and "burning wire insulation." Early indicators, however, are good for this new brand. It is targeted at smokers who already smoke lowtar cigarettes.

Apparently, people who are already concerned about their health are more interested in the cigarette than are people who are serious, heavy smokers. And non-smokers can rest easy since there also seems to be little danger with this cigarette of non-smokers converting to smoking. A survey earlier this year by Advertising Age found that only 13 percent of non-smokers even showed an interest in the product.

So there it is. A cigarette that allows smokers to continue to pollute their bodies while non-smokers are free to breathe deeply, (provided they don't live by a factory, freeway, garbage dump, or grub-spray manufacturer). It's too bad that this product probably won't have much of a chance.

Anti-smoking groups have already petitioned the FDA to regulate this new cigarette as a drug. The FDA has been considering these petitions and has been trying to decide if they have legal authority over the product. Granted, the new cigarette is not perfect. It They should reach a decision in the next two to three months.

However, Premier should be already formally introduced to the market by then, and a FDA decision against them would yank them from the shelves indefinitely while they attempt to go through the proper channels to gain government approval. They will have lost all of the media build up given to the product, and expect difficulty re-introducing the product later.

t seems that some people just can't be happy unless they are saving everyone else from themselves. Why should a non-smoking activist group be trying to shut down the creation of a cigarette that won't bother them? If smokers wish to pollute themselves without polluting others. why shouldn't they?

Now, if the FDA decides to regulate, nonsmokers will be forced to put up with regular noxious cigarettes for who knows how long, while the non-offensive smokeless cigarettes will sit in a warehouse somewhere, doing no one any good, except for a few tobaccoloving rats.

It appears that the non-smoking activists have saved the smokers from polluting their bodies with the smokeless cigarettes, at the expense of everyone who will have to continue inhaling smoke that could easily have been avoided.

Bakker ministry evokes questionable attitude

In 1987, a sex-and-money scandal removed the Rev. Jim Bakker from his position and brought the Praise The Lord ministry crashing down. Bakker has to raise $3 million as a "good faith" deposit toward the $172 million that he needs to purchase the ministry.

Typically, Tammy is at her husband's side helping with the fundraising.

She has sent more than 400,000 letters asking for donations from $25 to $1,000. In return, donators will receive a copy of Tammy's newest album "Peace in the Midst of the Storm."

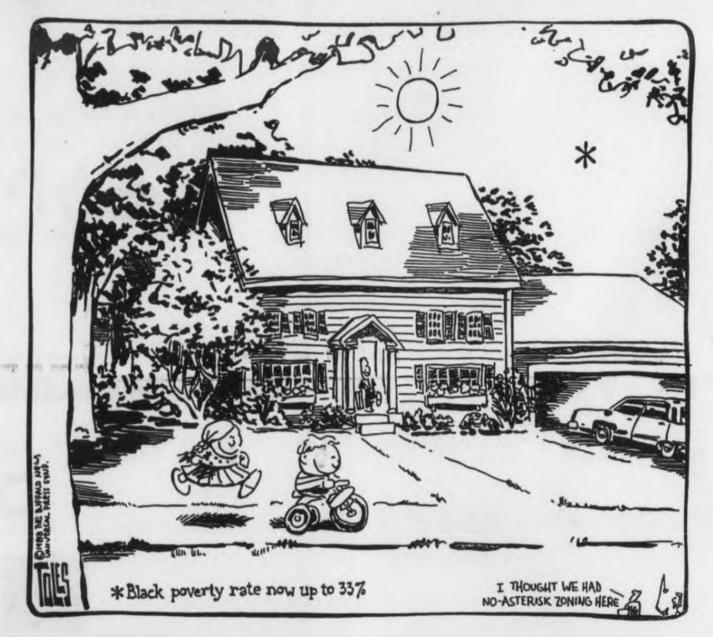

Bakker was chastised as a sinner by officials and members of PTL. Objects from his home that he purchased with PTL funds were auctioned while the nation snickered and those at

Now, less than a 18 months later, these same people are begging the Bakkers to purchase the bankrupt ministry.

In their eyes it is better to have the Bakkers own the ministry than to have it collapse.

One minute the Bakkers are the "cancer on the body of the church," and the next they are the cure.

It's no wonder that many people find it difficult to take teleevangelists seriously. And some things never cease to be amazing.

Honors mislabeled barely into the football season. Speaking of

On Sept. 7, the Collegian printed a story concerning Golden Key National Honor Society's winning of the Key Chapter Award of the fourth consecutive year. There were several inaccuracies that I feel need to be clarified.

First of all, our advisor, Willard J. Nelson, is not the dean of the College of Education, but associate director of the Center for Student and Professional Services in the College of Education. Willard was awarded the prestigous President's Award last August at the President's Award is a national award, bestowed by our national president upon one individual who has contributed exceptionally to Golden Key. As Golden Key has 124 chapters ond over 135,000 lifetime members throughout the United States who are eligible to recieve this award, it is considered the highest achievement one can obtain in Golden Key. It is not a local award as was reported.

Finally, the K-State Chapter receives the Key Chapter Award by virtue of the many activities we participate in, which are recorded in a notebook and submitted to the national office. The Key Chapter Award is not a notebook competition, but an award where active and dynamic chapters are recognized.

Camp out too early

For me there are some things that are just fundamentally wrong.

An example of this is people who start camping out for basketball tickets a month before they start selling them, when we're football, where are these people going to be during Homecoming? Sitting outside Ahearn Field House? So already we know what kind of K-State fans they are — fairweather.

That's the reason there were more Hawkeye fans in our stadium last weekend than Wildcat fans.

These people have the spare time to camp out, but what about other obligations, like school? Don't get me wrong — I camped out last year, but not for a month. There are too many other things going on.

I blame not only the fools who started so early, but also the KSU Athletic Department national convention in Scottsdale, Ariz. The for not putting a restriction on the earliest possible date to start camping out last

Incorrect facts

I am writing to correct some misinformation in the Sept. 9 article on English Proficiency Testing. As the article states, proficiency testing is conducted for all incoming international students. The purpose is to see if they would benefit from taking a support course in writing or pronunciation, ENGL 075 or SPCH 065.

Contrary to the information in the article, international graduate students do not have to take or pass SPCH 065 in order to become teaching assistants. They do have to pass the SPEAK test. This test is not a final exam for SPCH 065, although one section of that course is geared toward helping students perform well on that test. The test has seven sections, not four as was reported. Your reporters made repeated calls in an effort to get their information straight, but they seemed to approach the task with considerable confusion. May I suggest that you maintain a file of such information so that your reporters might at least know what questions to ask when they come for an interview. Enid Cocke

Vote Republican

The Democrats have controlled the House of Representatives for 92 percent and the Senate for 78 percent of the years since 1933 - far too long. Thus, many millions of Americans and Democrats and Independents will vote Republican in November.

You hear the Democrats say they are for the people, yet they have burdened families, farmers, businesses and manufacturers with heavy taxes, a horrendous debt, a 1,200-agency bureaucracy, regulation upon regulation, four big wars, and have provided no reserve for rainy days. Would we the people have voted for all that deficit spending and bureaucracy? Is that what men fought and died for on battlefields?

Our founding fathers would sadly say, We made Congress your servant, but the Democrats have made it your master."

The time has come to write members of Congress - "Cut spending in all departments, balance the budget, make 2 percent yearly payments on debt, pay it in 50 years, stop bankrupting the nation."

With our votes in November, we the people can help end deficit spending, save our republic, and save our precious God given freedom for ourselves, our children and our grandchildren.

Knopp against MOE

I was surprised to read Rep. Joe Knopp's claim of support for the Margin of Excellence in an advertisement of his recently. It is hard to understand how he can "remain fully commited to the Margin of Excellence" when his voting record clearly shows his lack of commitment to the MOE and K-State.

The original proposal to fund the MOE was countered by the governor's proposal which excluded research salaries and program enhancements. This minimal plan would have hurt K-State more than it would have any other Regents school because of the large number of faculty at K-State in research and Extension positions and because of the desperate need at K-State for library and support personnel. Yet Knopp says he favored the governor's plan.

It is clear, as Knopp says, that there was an intense effort to make the MOE a meaningful proposal. Close votes in separate House and Senate committees supported increased funding to all faculty and for program enhancement. Knopp correctly says that our state senator worked hard for those increases. What Knopp fails to point out is that he, as our state representative, did nothing to support these increases.

To the contrary, when the bill for full funding of the MOE was on the House floor on March 16, 1988, Knopp voted against full funding.

I agree that support for the MOE is an essential element to K-State and our state's future. I do not, however, agree with Knopp's misleading claims of support for the MOE and K-State.

Two months before an election is a little late to build a record of commitment.

K-State, MCC offer program

By Sarah Kobs Collegian Reporter

Not many people have the opportunity to receive two degrees from two different universities at the same time, but students enrolled at Manhattan Christian College and K-State have been doing just that since 1968.

Last year 30 percent of MCC's full-time students declared a dual major with K-State. Enrollment figures for this year haven't been released, but preliminary figures suggest that this year will be similar.

Jolene Rupe, assistant to the vice president for development at MCC, said most students earning a dual degree are enrolled full-time at MCC and live in MCC housing.

Rupe said there are about 12 fulltime K-State students taking classes at MCC. These students take classes for their personal interest instead of a dual degree, she said.

"All dual degree programs take five years to complete," Rupe said. "First year students must be 100 percent enrolled at MCC. When they begin their sophomore year they can start taking classes at both colleges. The fourth and fifth years they must enroll full-time at K-State and parttime at MCC to finish the program requirements."

The dual degree program offers several choices for students, Rupe said, adding that the diversity of degrees benefits K-State and MCC students.

"It's attractive to incoming freshmen who are enrolled at MCC since many of them are still undecided," she said.

Travis Strong, senior at MCC, will get his degree in Christian education in December. He took 11 hours at K-State that transferred to MCC as electives.

"K-State was the reason that brought me to MCC in the first place," Strong said.

Every college at K-State, except veterinary medicine, has a dual degree program with MCC.

"K-State sends a recruiting team to MCC so they can learn about MCC's curriculum," Rupe said.

Dick Elkins, director of admissions at K-State, said the program is a plus for both colleges, although MCC benefits more than K-State.

"MCC is a fine institution and we are happy to work with them," Elkins said.

Although there aren't many K-State students that use the dual degree program with MCC, Elkins said he has received several inquiries about it.

The main curriculum at MCC is in ministries. Rupe said they emphasize Christian service in the community and church.

"What students learn at MCC should be portrayed in their lifestyle," she said. "It gives another dimension to their education."

Dennis Glenn, vice president for academic affairs at MCC, said he believes the dual degree program is positive for both institutions.

"The program makes available to students a type of education virtually unavailable anywhere else," he said. Genae Willich is in her fourth year of a dual degree in Christian music and music eduation at MCC and K-State.

She said that there are advantages of being involved with both colleges, but that she can tell a definite difference between the two schools. "Life goals of the students differ,"

"Life goals of the students differ," she said. "K-State students have humanistic goals and seem more money-oriented."

FBI director suspends workers for negligent terrorism probe

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — FBI Director William Sessions suspended three FBI employees and censured three others Wednesday for negligently operating what he called an "unnecessarily broad" terrorism probe into a group opposing the Reagan administration's Central American policies.

All those disciplined were lowerand mid-level employees. The suspensions were for 14 days without

Sessions said top-level officials had been unaware the bureau was collecting information "on rank-and-file members" of the Committee in Solidarity with the People of El Salvador who he said had "nothing to do with international terrorism."

Sessions said there is no evidence that the White House or any other government agency or outside private group attempted to influence the CISPES probe. The investigation took place between March 1983 and June 1985 when William Webster was FBI director. Sessions became FBI head last November, after Webster was named CIA director.

Sessions, testifying before the Senate Intelligence Committee, vowed to institute changes that would keep top bureau officials fully apprised of sensitive terrorism investigations that might impinge on constitutional rights.

The CISPES probe began in March 1983 based largely on information from a now-discredited informant in Dallas, Frank Varelli, alleging the group was supplying financial support to two terrorist organizations and preparing for terrorist activities in the United States.

"Varelli's background was not checked, he was not properly and thoroughly reviewed and there was just negligence all the way along the line," Sessions told the committee. Sessions said that without the Varelli claims of terrorist activity, there would have been an insufficient basis to investigate CISPES.

Committee chairman Sen. David Boren, D-Okla., suggested that much of Varelli's information came from unproven allegations published in a right-wing magazine in Mexico.

Sessions disciplined a supervisor and former assistant special agent in charge of the Dallas FBI office and a supervisor in another unspecified bureau, along with a field supervisor, unit chief and section chief at bureau headquarters in Washington. All six were given written reprimands and three of them were placed on probation and suspended from duty without pay for 14 calendar days. He did not give their names.

Hostage situation damages papal visit to Lesotho; 4 die

By The Associated Press

MASERU, Lesotho — Pope John Paul II arrived in this tiny kingdom Wednesday just 20 minutes before a bloody shootout between police and gunmen holding a busload of nuns and children on a papal pilgrimage.

Four people reportedly died.

John Paul was to fly from Botswana to Lesotho today but bad weather forced his chartered jet to make an unscheduled landing in South Africa, the target of his criticism during his southern Africa tour.

The pope arrived in Lesotho eight hours behind schedule and just 20 minutes before the tense hostage drama was played out.

Police said gunmen hijacked the bus carrying with about 70 people Tuesday, drove it to the British High Commission, or embassy, compound and demanded to meet the pope. Authorities said the hijackers began firing after they tried to drive the vehicle through the closed gates of the embassy compound.

Three hijackers and a hostage, a young woman, were killed in a gun battle with police, authorities said. Eleven other passengers were wounded, the rest of the hostages were rescued, and one hijacker was arrested, police said.

Student borrowers face responsibility

By Lori Rice-Morsell Collegian Reporter

Students borrowing money for school should borrow only what they need and should keep in touch constantly with their lender, said Larry Viterna, director of student financial assistance.

As of June 30, over 60,000 loans have been guaranteed by the Higher Education Assistance Foundation, he said. Almost 47,000 loans, Viterna said, have reached maturity, which means they should be in the process of being repaid, but almost 6,000 loans are in default status, he said.

"Our rate of default has stayed consistent between 11 and 12 percent, which is considered to be very good for a public, four-year, openaccess university," Viterna said.

As long a borrower attends school at least part-time, payments and interest are deferred on Stafford Student Loans, formerly called Guaranteed Student Loans. After leaving school, student borrowers are allowed a six-month grace period before repayment begins, Viterna said.

"Delinquency begins the first day after a payment is due and is not paid," said Sharon O'Neal, student loan coordinator at Columbia Savings.

Before a loan enters default status, the lender must go through 180 days of due diligence processing, O'Neal said. This means the lender must send late notices, make phone calls and do "skip tracings" to find borrowers who have moved but did not leave a forwarding address, she said.

O'Neal said that after 150 days of non-payment a final letter, demanding the entire balance with interest, is sent to the borrower. Also during the 180 days the problem loan is reported to a national credit rating association,

At the end of 180 days the lending agency sends a claim reimbursement to HEAF, which must repay the loan. At this time the loan enters default status, O'Neal said.

"After the lenders have done everything they are supposed to do to try to collect on a loan, the guarantor must pay off the loan. At that time the loan belongs to HEAF (the guarantor), who then must try to collect on the loan," said Alden Shields, vice president of HEAF.

Viterna said a collection agency can put pressure on the borrower to repay or the Internal Revenue Service can keep tax refunds to cover some or all of a loan in default.

Wages from the borrower's job can be garnisheed, Viterna said.

Credit rating problems are another consequence of defaulting on a loan, he said. A loan in default remains on a credit rating even after it has been repaid, he said.

"A person who has defaulted on a loan cannot receive financial aid — even at a different school. A financial aid transcript goes anywhere a student goes," Viterna said.

Viterna said financial aid offices are required to provide loan counseling interviews that inform students of the rights and responsibilities of having a loan. He also said promissory notes have become more specific.

"Student loans are easy to get, if the need is there. But students must remember that they have the responsibility to pay them back, because it will have an effect on their future," Viterna said.

U.S. experts witness Soviet test

By The Associated Press

SEMIPALATINSK, U.S.S.R.

— The land heaved and windows broke more than two miles away Wednesday when the Soviet Union detonated a underground nuclear bomb for the first American experts to witness a Soviet nuclear blast.

The Americans stood in a chilly wind on the barren test site at the Forward Command Post Semipalatinsk Polygon about 1,700 miles southeast of Moscow in the republic of Kazakhstan.

The wind blew the Soviet and American flags in the direction of the test range, far from the nearest settlement on the steppes of Soviet Central Asia and a four-hour bus ride from the city of Semipalatinsk.

As the shock wave rippled out, the ground shook and a low rumble began. Within moments of the 11 a.m. blast, a reddish dust cloud rolled above the spot where Soviet scientists planted a nuclear device in a shaft drilled 642 yards into hard rock.

Some observers seemed a bit queasy from their proximity to ground zero, only 2.4 miles away.

Soviet observers watching a similar test on Aug. 17 in Pahute Mesa, Nev., remained about 30 miles from the blast site — too far away to feel the impact. It was the first time Soviet experts were allowed to see a U.S. nuclear test and monitor it with their own equipment.

After Wednesday's test, the Soviet scientists quickly checked their instruments and announced they had obtained the data necessary to determine the force of the blast the explosion destroyed the sensor cable buried a few yards from the nuclear device. The Soviets and the Americans, who monitored the blast with U.S. technology, have agreed to release the data within a month.

The blast was designed to have a force of 100 to 150 kilotons, about 10 times that of the atomic bomb the Americans dropped on Hiroshima, Japan, at the end of World War II, but less powerful than the multimegaton hydrogen bombs detonated in the atmosphere at the height of nuclear testing.

Timothy Skramstad, a chaplain in the Army, counsels a soldier. He is one of five Army chaplains studying for his master's degree in marriage and family therapy.

John Hall, Army chaplain, relaxes at the beginning of a day of classes. The chaplains divide their time between classes and counseling.

The chaplains walk to Justin Hall after lunch. K-State is the only university where chaplains can earn master's degrees to counsel soldiers with family or marital problems.

Chaplains study at K-State

Timothy Skramstad spends most of his days in class- not there, so military families tend to turn to the chaplain rooms, pursuing a master's degree in marriage and family therapy. When he is not in class, however, he dons the Army's battle dress uniform and combat boots and goes to the Fort Riley Family-Life Center to provide family counseling services to soldiers and their families.

The insignia on the collar of his battle dress uniform gives away his calling. He wears a cross, the sign of the Army Chaplain Corps.

Skramstad is one of five Army chaplains in a program at K-State that trains chaplains to serve as directors of family-life centers on U.S. military installations around

K-State is the only university in the United States authorized by the Army for chaplains to receive their master's in marriage and family therapy.

Although most civilian chaplains spend the majority of their time counseling, much of it concentrates on individuals. The Army centers provide a different service. They counsel soldiers with marital or family problems, which is called conjoint counseling. Conjoint counseling involves the family as a unit.

Chaplain Charles E. Mallard, head of the Fort Riley Family-Life Center, said no other military activity uses the whole-family concept to help improve family

"We treat the relationship," he said, "not just the individual."

The need for family counseling has developed over the past 30 years as the number of married soldiers has increased. Today, the Army is predominately made of married soldiers, he said.

Married persons in the Army have experienced the same changes and accompanying problems that civilian couples have. More soldiers are married, more are single parents, and more of their spouses work outside the military. For military personnel, the problems are compounded by the additional stress of the military lifestyle,

It is a lifestyle of long separations, often leaving one person to do a job that is meant for two. The frequent moves are a financial burden and family members sometimes feel isolated when they are new in a community. Unannounced deployment exercises and the possibility of combat places stress on the families.

"The Army really is an artificial society," Skramstad said. "The average age is so young, and they have no older people to look to for direction or to serve as role models. Being cut off from homes and families of origin is

Despite the different lifestyle, Skramstad said he does not think Army families have more problems than civilian families have.

"I've never seen any statistics to indicate the divorce rate is any higher with military families than in the American population as a whole," he said. "But the usual sources of support — family, friends and church — are enrich the quality of life in military communities.

Fredrick S. Carr, Army chaplain, said he became a chaplain because he wanted to do counseling from a religious viewpoint. He knew being a chaplain would give him this opportunity. "Soldiers look to the chaplain as their spiritual leader when they would never dream of doing this with the minister at the local church in their hometown. They consider you to be their chaplain because you are the unit's chaplain," Carr said.

Skramstad said counseling is fulfilling because of the opportunity to work with people in real-life crises, such as AIDS patients and people with serious family problems. He said working in the Army also gives him the opportunity to work with people from different backgrounds.

The chaplains who have been selected for the graduate program in marriage and family therapy have worked with soldiers and their family members in previous assignments.

Their experience, coupled with the skills obtained in the master's program in marriage and family therapy, supplies the skills needed to effectively direct a familylife center, Mallard said.

The curriculum includes courses in family education and consultation, conjoint and group counseling techniques, and human sexuality. The 14-month program also includes a 10-hour week counseling practicum at the Fort Riley Family-Life Center.

Chaplains can either apply for the program or are nominated because they have a good track record in family ministry. A board of chaplains then selects the most qualified chaplains to attend graduate school. Usually five or six chaplains are selected a year, Mallard said.

Upon completion of graduate school, Skramstad, Carr and Army Chaplains William B. Broome, John D. Hall and Richard P. Roggia will be assigned as directors of family-life centers. They will counsel, train other chaplains in family counseling methods, and teach classes to

Check holding law limits banks' time

By Susan L'Ecuyer Senior Staff Writer

For bank customers in large metropolitan cities, it may be considered a blessing - but for Manhattan banks and their customers, it's "business as usual," according to one Manhattan bank executive.

"It" is a new federal law that, for the first time, limits the length of time a bank can hold a check. Starting this month, if a customer deposits cash, cashier's checks, checks drawn on the customer's banking institution, or federal, state or local government checks, those funds must be available the next business day.

If customers deposit local checks into their accounts, their banks or savings and loan institutions must credit the amount of the check to their accounts within three business days.

"Things aren't being done any differently," said Tim Taussig, controller for the Manhattan Union National Bank & Trust Co. "Basically, we're treating it as a non-event. It's business as usual."

The Expedited Funds Availability Act was designed by Congress to prevent certain abuses of check holds within the banking industry.

The Federal Reserve estimated that banks made as much as $290 million a year with the practice. The institutions would receive credit for the checks after a few days, yet hold the checks for up to three weeks. Meanwhile, banks would make money by investing the held funds.

The Kansas State Bank won't be affected, but John Musselman, vice president and cashier of the bank, said "customers may find banks a lot more rigid."

Capitol Federal Savings and Loan Association raised its insufficient funds charge from $12 to $15 on checks written on accounts with insufficient funds. It is also applying stricter standards on new accounts, said Frank Wright, first vice president of Capitol Federal.

For example, prospective customers who have had problems at other banks will more than likely be refused a new account at Capitol Federal, as will those who habitually overdraw their accounts, Wright said.

Students who seek to establish an account at Capitol Federal may find it difficult. Manhattan and Lawrence are the two markets where Capitol Federal experiences the most difficulty with insufficient funds, Wright said.

New western fun, lacks true grit

By Judd Annis Collegian Reviewer

By the time we hit college, we've seen a lot of westerns.

We've seen good guys and bad guys. We've seen covered wagons, rot-gut whiskey, and wild, wild women.

We've seen killings, in every form imaginable, both deserved and undeserved. And when it's all over, we've into the sunset.

So why would we want to pay money to see it all over again? Good question.

If you do feel inclined to do so, go see "Young Guns," the new western by director Christopher Cain.

Sheen, Emilio Estevez, Kiefer film earned its R rating. Sutherland, Lou Diamond Phillips, Dermot Mulroney and Casey Sieorphans known as "regulators."

They are raised by a compassionate man named Tunstall (Terrance Stamp) to be law-abiding, old-west part of Billy the Kid, is fun to watch.

His plans end suddenly when he is gunned down in a high plains assassination by his enemy, the wealthy landlord played by Jack Palance and Palance's ruthless gang.

As you might assume, the "regulators" seek vengeance for their friend's death.

Deputized to issue warrants for seen the hero (or heroine) ride off Tunstall's killers, they are sworn to uphold the law, that is until they commence to killing the suspects instead of bringing them in for trial.

It's not long before they start appearing on everyone's mostwanted list and the fun begins.

There is a lot of action in this flick. "Young Guns" stars Charlie And blood? Well, let's just say the

The rest of the "regulators" also turn out solid performances as scared kids on the run from just about everyone.

Even if you just have a crush on one of the actors and you want to see how he sits in the saddle, go for it. Just don't go see "Young Guns" because you like westerns. Since the western was created, dozens of gun-totin', rough-ridin', grit-eatin' stars have done it all better.

I suggest you go rent their movies. They are the ones who really deserve

Look out for 'Bomb Squad'

Washington: 'a little Anthony Carter'

By Chris Wilhelm Sports Writer

It's the "in" thing for football teams to nickname their units, so it's not unusual that K-State's receiving corps has proclaimed itself the "Bomb Squad."

With that in mind, Tulane's Green Wave had better prepare for one of K-State's explosive wide receivers, Greg Washington.

The 5-foot-10, 155-pound junior from Austin, Texas, has had much success in his last two contests. Washington has caught 11 passes for 126 yards, ranking him second in the Big Eight Conference and 24th nationally.

Against the University of Iowa Saturday, Washington pulled in nine passes for 100 yards, tying him for third on K-State's single-game receiving record.

"My last game was probably my best as far as number of receptions goes," Washington said. "It wasn't my best game in that I didn't get the ball in the open field with room to run. That's what really excites me. It's every wide receiver's dream to get the ball in the open field."

While some Wildcat fans are still realizing that K-State has exciting receivers, it doesn't surprise

Washington. "It's a shock to people around Manhattan how we played on Saturday," Washington said. "Not to take anything away from last year's receivers, but this year the guys are catching a little better, they are a little faster and they are willing to sacrifice for the team."

Washington knows about sacrifice. He sat out the season last year as a redshirt transfer from Cincinnati University.

"The hardest thing for me since I've been a receiver at K-State was to sit out last year," Washington said. "I didn't like sitting there watching, knowing I couldn't do anything to help. It was heartbreaking."

passes for 126 yards, ranking him second in the Big Eight.

Washington's accomplishments have definitely grabbed the attention of his coaches.

"He works very hard in practice. There aren't many that play well on Saturday that don't," coach Stan Parrish said. "He runs very good patterns and he is an intelligent player. He reminds me a little of Anthony Carter. He's one of those small guys that has the ability to get open and not get hit too hard. And he can make something happen after he catches it. "He catches about 90 percent of the footballs we throw at him all the time."

Washington lives his life from day to day with an attitude of making the most of every situation.

"I have a positive outlook on life that I carry on to the playing field," Washington said. "I think the whole team should. I'm just going to go out week after week and play the best I can."

Hurricane Gilbert might postpone 'Cat-Tulane game

By The Associated Press

Hurricane Gilbert could cause problems for K-State's football team even though it is swirling around more than a thousand miles away in the Gulf of Mexico.

The Wildcats are scheduled to play Tulane Saturday night in the Superdome in New Orleans, but K-State athletic director Steve Miller said Wednesday the game could be postponed by the hurricane.

There is a very real potential of our making an adjustment in that schedule, either changing the game a day or simply changing the game for future consideration," Miller said, adding that one alternative would be to play the game at the end of the year.

He said he has been talking regularly with Tulane athletic director Chet Gladchuk and a decision will be made by Thursday afternoon. The Wildcats are scheduled to leave Manhattan Friday morning.

Gladchuck said in New Orleans Wednesday that "this is a very severe situation."

"We'd like to see the contest conducted, but we're not going to jeopardize anyone's safety because of a football game," he said.

Problems continuing with basketball team in Bluegrass State

By The Associated Press

LEXINGTON, Ky. - With a new basketball season beginning in a month, the University of Kentucky hasn't seen an end to the last one.

There haven't been the sounds of bouncing balls, referee's whistles or cheerleaders' chants, but the stakes are just as high as in any of the games played by the school's five national championship teams.

Ten days after Danny Manning led the Kansas Jayhawks to the NCAA title April 4, the Los Angeles Daily News reported in a copyright article that a Kentucky assistant coach allegedly sent $1,000 in cash to a prized recruit's father.

Since then, the beleaguered basketball program has faced: A letter of inquiry from the NCAA regarding the money and the prospects of 10 additional allegations Allegations that Eric Manuel, the leading scorer and rebounder back from last year's team, cheated on an American College Test to gain eligibility to play last season.

And before the current problems surfaced, the school was slapped with a reprimand by the NCAA on March 3 for not fully cooperating on a previous investigation.

When the NCAA notified the school of its inquiry July 22, it said 'approximately 10 additional allegations" would be submitted in about 30 days. The school has braced itself, but there hasn't been a word.

"We will defend the basketball program against any unfounded allegation," UK president David Roselle said after receiving notification from the NCAA, "but we will take full responsibility for any wrongdoing judged to have occurred."

Speculation has gone in different directions on the delay in allegations. One view is that the NCAA is uncovering more rules infractions as it digs deeper in the probe. The other view is that the NCAA hasn't been able to find enough evidence to substantiate further charges.

Dwane Casey is the UK assistant alleged to have sent money by Emery Air Freight Corp. on March 30 to Claud Mills, father of recruit Chris Mills. Emery employees said a package containing a videocassette opened in transit, revealing the Casey denied sending money and the Millses denied receiving any.

Casey filed a $6.9 million lawsuit against Emery, contending the company mishandled the package. He also alleged that his character was defamed and that he suffered "severe and grievous mental and emotional suffering."

An attorney representing Emery said the carrier would defend its position vigorously in court.

Mills, a 6-foot-7 forward, is enrolled at the university and is expected to be an integral part of the new team.

Sports Briefly

Soccer team to play twice

K-State's soccer team, 1-0-1 overall, is scheduled to play two games this weekend. At 3 p.m. Saturday, the Wildcats are slated to meet Wichita State University and at 1 p.m. Sunday, K-State is set to meet Oklahoma State University. Both games will be in Memorial Stadium.

In games last week, K-State tied Iowa State, 0-0 at Ames, and defeated Nebraska, 4-3 in Lincoln.

Baseball season to start

K-State will begin its fall baseball schedule this weekend by taking on Barton County and Cowley County community colleges in a doubleheader, beginning at noon Saturday at Frank Myers Field.

Following their games with the Wildcats, the two community colleges will play each other.

K-State has scheduled 10 games this fall, including a doubleheader with Creighton of the Missouri Valley Conference. The Wildcats were 34-24 a year ago.

Straw has good practice

K-State coach Stan Parrish saw good things from quarterback Carl Straw during the Wildcats' Wednesday practice. "Carl had a good night, probably the best he has had," Par-

Straw threw for 272 yards in Saturday's loss to Iowa, but he also threw five interceptions. He has started the first two games of the season for K-State. Returning to the practice field after sitting out with injuries were defensive lineman Bobby Lawrence (ankle) and defensive back Tyreese Herds (shoulder).

Cat coaches offer Olympic

By Chris Hays Sports Writer

Editor's Note: This is the first of a two-part series on K-State's coaches' and athletes' input on the 1988 Summer Olympic Games which begin Friday in Seout, South Korea.

The wait is finally over for the U.S. Olympic athletes that will be competing at the 1988 Summer Olympic Games in Seoul, South Korea. Opening ceremonies are scheduled to take place Friday and and the games will officially begin Saturday.

Various K-State coaches have international experience in their respective sports, and have offered some input as to how they feel the United States will fare.

BASKETBALL United States' basketball teams have lost the gold medal only once in Olympic history, and many question whether it actually lost in Munich in 1972 or was it the victim of poor officiating.

The U.S. is favored to repeat its 1984 gold medal performance with Russia, Yugoslavia, Brazil and Spain listed as top contenders. Brazil upset the U.S. in last year's Pan Am Games.

This year's squad will feature a Kansas flavor. Former Wildcat standout Mitch Richmond made Coach John Thompson's 12-man roster this summer, as did college player of the year and former University of Kansas star Danny Manning.

"Like a lot of people, I think that

Big Eight Olympians

been getting tougher with each Olympic games," said K-State basketball coach Lon Kruger.

"A lot of it has to with the fact that those teams have been spending a lot many of the other countries have of time in the United States and they have become more and more Americanized in the past 12 to 15 years. We have a good chance (for a gold medal), but it's not anything automatic."

Kruger, who coached a Big Eight Conference select team that toured China last year, was obviously not surprised thatr Richmond made the team.

"As far as Mitch is concerned, I think he gives the team a dimension that John Thompson is looking for. He can work well offensively and he can also cover people," Kruger said. "He has a good shot at playing a lot." TRACK AND FIELD

The Soviet Union, East Germany and the United States are expected to dominate track and field events, just as they did at the world championships last summer in Rome.

Long jump and sprint specialist Carl Lewis heads the U.S. mens' team and will be trying to duplicate his 1984 Olympic feats by becoming the first ever to win four gold medals in two Olympics. Lewis will compete in the long jump, 100- and 200-meter dashes and on the 400-meter relay team. The U.S. could also pick up two gold medals from Butch Reynolds, brother of K-State trackster Jeff.

'Brain drain' being reversed, Regents director determines

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — The "brain drain" caused by the departure of the state's bright students to attend out-of-state universities is being reversed, a State Board of Regents official said today.

This year, half of the state students who were semifinalists for National Merit scholarships will attend state colleges and universities, compared to less than a third three years ago, Stanley Koplik, regents executive director, told the Legislative Educational Planning Committee.

Koplik attributed the increase in the number of National Merit scholars staying in-state to more aggressive recruiting by state universities.

"That's a decent figure," Koplik told the legislators. "That keeps the best here in Kansas."

In 1985, only about 50 of the state's 156 National Merit semifinalists attended Kansas universities or colleges. The numbers alarmed regents officials and state lawmakers. The situation became known as the "brain drain," because they feared the state was losing its brightest minds.

Particularly galling, Koplik said, was the loss of students to institutions with less impresive academic reputations than Kansas universities.

"There's no point in losing National Merit scholars to the University of Houston or Ohio State," Koplik said. "We're always going to lose them to Stanford and Brown, and that's fine."

This year, the state has about 150 National Merit semifinalists, Koplik said. Among those who decided to attend Kansas colleges, 40 are enrolled at the University of Kansas and 31 at Kansas State University, he said.

"I do believe that the individual regents institutions are more active in recruiting than they were in the past," said Rep. Denise Apt, R-Iola, and chairwoman of the committee.

As an example of more aggressive recruiting, Koplik cited Kansas State's efforts to attract valedictorians and saludatorians of the state's graduating high school classes. Of about 600 such students, one-third are now enrolled at Kansas State, he said.

In addition, the regents unveiled their proposal for a new scholarship program for minority students. The plan would finance 100, $1,500 scholarships for minorities who graduate from Kansas high schools in its first year and 400 in its fourth year.

Clantha McCurdy, the regents program associate for financial assistance programs, told the committee that the program is aimed at minority students who otherwise could not afford to go to college.

RICHMOND, Va. — A man claiming he wanted to promote peace in Lebanon held 11 people at gunpoint at a military recruiting center Wednesday before releasing them unharmed and surrendering.

The gunman, identified as Samuel Eloud, 20, of suburban Henrico County, was being held at county police headquarters on 11 counts of abduction and 11 counts of use of a firearm in commission of a felony, authorities said.

Police Sgt. Joe Sands said Eloud described himself to police during telephone negotiations as being of Lebanese descent and said he had two armed companions.

The gunman began releasing his captives after two local radio stations broadcast a statement, but his

New bar doesn't serve alcohol, to offer bands, big dance floor

By Susan Reimer Collegian Reporter

Tonight a new bar will open in Aggieville with the hopes of attracting students interested in having a good time and listening to music without the presence of alcohol.

Chameleons, a bar which won't be serving alcohol, is open to anyone at least 18 years old with a college ID, said Marc Smith, junior in marketing and owner of the bar.

"(The bar's) main objective is to provide an alternative to spending an hour in line waiting to go into a bar where underage students can't drink," Smith said. "It makes them feel left out and it perpetuates the idea that you have to be drunk to have

Smith said he believes that by providing a quality sound system and entertainment it won't be necessary for patrons to drink in order to have a good time.

"It is a place to rock and to socialize," he said.

Unless Chameleons is rented for a private party, it will be open from 8 p.m. to midnight on Wednesdays and Sundays, from 8 p.m. to 2 a.m. on Thursdays and from 8 p.m. to 3 a.m. on Fridays and Saturdays.

Ticks often transmit complex, dangerous diseases

By Theresa Luling Collegian Reporter

Many people walking in tall grasses or wooded areas may think they are alone and safe, but actually they are surrounded by tiny ticks that may be dangerous.

Ticks can transmit Lyme disease, a sickness that may go unnoticed at its onset, but has the potential to seriously debilitate its victim if left untreated.

"The Lyme disease is serious and people should know about it," said Don Mock, professor of entomology. "The disease has a complex array of effects on the body.'

In most cases, the first symptom is a rash with a red and white circular pattern at the site of the tick bite,

"A lot of symptoms can be mistaken for the flu, such as the low-grade fever, chills and headaches," he said. These symptoms occur in early stages of the disease, he said.

Although Mock is a livestock entomologist, not a medical entomologist, the two disciplines have a lot in common.

"Because of the worry about the Lyme disease, I have tried to learn all I can about the disease and its transmission," Mock said.

Currently, there is no ongoing and will commonly feed on birds and research being done on Lyme disease in Kansas, he said. According to an article in Sports Illustrated, the disease can, lie dormant for months or years, only to suddenly re-emerge with a variety of afflictions.

The disease is caused by a spirochete, a spiral-shaped, one-celled organism, Mock said.

The spirochetes are known to be carried by at least two species of ticks in the United States, he said. They are the deer tick, found in the East and upper Midwest, and its cousin, the black-legged tick in the West.

From the beginning of April through October, the ticks "quest" for mammals on which to feed.

The ticks grow in three stages beginning as larvae, Mock said, feeding on ground-nesting birds and other rodents. This feed lasts for two or three days, he said.

"Ticks are hearty characters and to progress to the next stage, they must have a blood meal," Mock said.

From larvae, the ticks develop into tiny nymphs that stay close to the ground during hot or dry weather. They wait under leaves and grass to catch a ride on their favorite targets - deer or the white-footed mouse, Mock said.

"Nymphs are not too particular

Although ticks are small, they can transmit Lyme disease, an illness that can be debilitating when it is not treated.

reptiles as well," he said. After two weeks of feeding in the second stage, the tick develops to addulthood, the final stage in development, Mock

Lyme disease has been reported in 33 states with a high concentration in East Coast states; Wisconsin and Minnesota; and to a lesser extent, California and Oregon, the article

Four cases of Lyme disease were reported in Kansas in the last two years; however, none of the victims picked up the disease in the state, he said.

"Don't breathe a sigh of relief," Mock said, because there is a possibility of the disease spreading to Kansas.

Mock described how the Lyme disease could spread to Kansas.

A student moves to K-State in the fall bringing his pet dog along. It just so happens the student is from a state where the Lyme disease is prevalent. The dog is carrying the disease from earlier contact with a tick, without anyone knowing it.

A local tick could attach itself to the dog and begin to feed, thus contracting the disease from the blood it has consumed.

The tick falls off and will later find another target on which to feed. The disease has begun its journey in Manhattan.

Another disease carried by ticks is the Rocky Mountain Spotted Fever, which was discovered in 1905, he said. The ticks could convey the disease from generation to generation. They can also contract it by feeding on an animal carrying the pathogen, Rickettsia.

Rickettsia, first identified in 1954, has been the cause of 30 cases in Kansas in 1987, Mock said.

Symptoms of the Fever are somewhat similar to the Lyme disease, Mock said. Headaches, fever and a rash can also be expected, but vaccines are available.

There are a variety of ticks and because of this, he said to "treat all as potential carriers."

A few simple precautions can be taken when planning to spend time outdoors between early April and late October:

Avoid tick habitats whenever possible. ■ Wear long pants with cuffs tucked into socks.

Wearing light-colored clothing will make it easier to spot ticks. For protection, use repellants and repellant collars for pets. Brush off clothing and check pets before entering the house.

Undress and check for ticks. They usually crawl about for several hours before burying into the skin.

Remove any attached ticks by gently tugging repeatedly with tweezers at the place where the tick's feeding tube enters the skin.

Mock suggested placing any ticks found on the body in a small bottle filled with alcohol.

"On a sheet of paper, write the date and where it was found," Mock said. Hold the tick, he said, so that if some of the early symptoms occur, the tick can be examined.

Campaigns go as debates near

By The Associated Press

George Bush said Wednesday that American flags have sold more briskly since Republicans "began restoring pride" in the country in 1981. Michael Dukakis stressed support for some weapons and muted earlier opposition to others as he sought to blunt attacks on his defense credentials.

Bush also touted smaller than expected trade deficit figures and Dukakis accused the Republicans of opposing "every single effort" to reform the Pentagon, while their managers fleshed out details on the campaign debates that are expected to be pivotal in the close race for the White House.

Officials said that vice presidential candidates Dan Quayle and Lloyd Bentsen would hold their only debate of the fall on Oct. 5 in Omaha, Neb. Los Angeles was fixed as the site of the second and final Bush-Dukakis debate on either Oct. 13 or 14.

The two contenders for the White House square off a week from Sunday in Winston-Salem, N.C., in their ward to it."

But Dukakis went to Annapolis,

Md., which was to have hosted a debate Wednesday night, and taunted the vice president for his refusal to make it a date. "If George Bush isn't ready today after seven and a half years as vice president of this country, how can we expect him to be ready on Jan. 20, 1989?" the Democrat said.

Dukakis aides said the Massachusetts governor would carve a day or two out of his travel schedule to prepare for the first debate, a reflection of the importance of the event in the hardfought campaign.

Public opinion polls in recent days have shown Bush holding a singledigit lead, and Democratic aides said privately they didn't look for much change in the 10 days before the

Back fatigue afflicts students, caused by overload, stress, age

By Lisa Pfannenstiel Collegian Reporter

Running from one class to another with books slung over one shoulder, slouching over homework for hours and stress from a day's furious schedule can leave a student with more than just a feeling of fatigue.

It could be a battle of the end-ofthe-day backache.

Everything a person does strains the back. By the time people are in their late 20's, they join up to 80 percent of the population who suffer from back pain, said officials from Ward Archer and Associates, speaking for American Innerspring Manufactures.

Students who suffer from back discomfort should realize the pain they experience is most often a result of a combination of daily abuse and wear and tear over time, said Dr. Guy Smith, director of the Eriksen Sports Medicine Clinic at Lafene Student Health Center.

Between the ages of 17 and 40, only 10 to 15 percent of back pain is due to the trauma or stress of an abnormal bone structure. Thirty to 35 percent of back problems result from a bad disc caused by wear and tear or an acute overload, Smith said.

He added that the rest of the population suffers from muscle and skeletal problems due to poor fitness, lack of conditioning and daily abuse.

High levels of activity or inactivity increase the risk of back problems, he said.

Persistent pain should be checked, but most of the time a specific diagnosis is impossible because all sources of back pain cannot be detected by present equipment, he said.

"We see three people with low back problems and acute back injuries each day," Smith said.

"Most of the back problems are caused from poor posture, poor muscle tone and poor work habits," said Jackie Rawlings, director of the physical therapy department at The St Mary Hospital.

"Maintenance is the best remedy to keep the back and body healthy,"

He said two things were especially important - general fitness and specific back exercises.

Smith highly recommended swimming to strengthen back muscles and achieve overall fitness.

"However, fitness is not directly linked to weight. Weight is overemphasized for everything. Actually, poor conditioning is the cause of most back problems," he said.

Other tips for a healthy back and body were included in Ward Archer and Associates' health watch.

Stand tall. Good posture is neither a relaxed, slumped-shoulder stance nor a military, shoulder-back stance. If people stand as tall as they can, the whole weight of the body will be straight up and down and centered over their feet.

Don't sit for long periods. The cramped position assumed when working at a computer terminal or when hunched over books is taxing on the body. Take short breaks and stretch every 15 minutes. Also, try resting feet on a book or two while sitting. If the knees are higher than the hips, it takes stress off the back.

Always stretch and warm up before exercising. Stretching exercises will help keep the body flexible and increase range of motion.

Posture during sleep can also be a factor in preventing backaches. Research shows the best type of bed for the back is one that maintains the spine in its normal erect position. While lying down, the spine should have a slight "S-curve," with just enough space for a hand between the lower back and the mattress.

Proper lifting techniques can ease potential back discomfort, Rawlings

For those patients experiencing an acute backache case, Eriksen Sports Medicine Clinic in Lafene offers physical therapy and medication. Exercise and conditioning suggestions are also given to students suffering from back discomfort.

Kathy Linenberger, junior in premed, suffered a back stress fracture in high school.

On Friday, Linenberger experienced the recurring condition while playing volleyball.

"I was just playing, and suddenly - in a minute or two - I felt the pain and couldn't walk off the playing field," she said.

Linenberger wore her custommade brace for five days to restrict arching of her back. The brace which inhibits movement - prevents the extreme pain that a jolt or sudden movement could cause.

She also exercises specific muscles to strengthen her back.

"To prevent future incidents, it's extremely important that I keep my abdomen muscles strong, supporting and strengthing my back."

"The major thing to remember is that the individual must learn to manage (back discomfort)," Smith said.

Alcoholism may be inherited

By The Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO - White blood cells reproduced from the cells of alcoholics differ from the cells of non-alcoholics in at least one key way, and researchers said Wednesday the findings could help prevent the disease.

The findings, reported in the mid-September issue of the Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences, tend to confirm epidemiologic evidence of an inherited aspect to alcohol dependency.

The research, led by Dr. Ivan F. Diamond of the University of California-San Francisco, involved the progeny of cells taken from lifelong alcoholics and from a non-drinking Mormon group. White blood cells from both groups were raised in a laboratory culture for up to six generations over seven or eight days without any exposure to alcohol.

The scientists found a difference between the cells descended from those of alcoholics and the cells raised from non-alcoholics, centering on the production of a molecule called cyclic adenosine monophosphate, or cAMP. The molecule relays messages from outside the cell to various locations inside and is necessary for nearly every metabolic function.

The cells reproduced from those of alcoholics showed surprisingly high levels of cAMP, three times the level found in the progeny of cells taken from the nonalcoholics.

Diamond and fellow researchers Laura E. Nagy and Adrienne Gordon also found the cells with the high cAMP levels had an increased sensitivity to alcohol; the cAMP levels dropped by an average of 39 percent after exposure to alcohol. The progeny of cells taken from non-alcoholics showed no significant change over a 24-hour period.

Diamond believes nerve cells in the brain should react similarly to the white blood cells in the study.

"Because the sensitivity could be genetic, we now have to go out and do genetic studies in families and confirm that this increased sensitivity to alcohol is the reason why certain people are at risk to become addicted to alcohol," said Diamond, who is director of the Ernest Gallo Clinic and Research Center at UCSF.

"Traditionally, physicians have approached alcoholism from a behavioral viewpoint or in experimental animals," he said. "Our studies show that you don't need whole animals to learn about dependency and addiction, but instead can take cells from alcoholics and study the disease at the molecular level."

'We do feel there is a genetic aspect to alcoholism. We don't know what gene it hangs on," said Dick Bast of the National Institute of Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism.

that are 7 feet in height on one end and gradually decline to 3 feet. There will be entrances on both sides of the structure, with a bench and flagpole in the center. A light will project upward from the base of the flagpole and shine on an American flag.

While one wall will bear the memorial inscription, the other will display the names of 38 K-State students who were killed in the Vietnam War. Taglieri said they are still searching through the roll books of soldiers who died in Vietnam to see if there are more who attended K-State.

Although the memorial will only bear the names of K-Staters who lost their lives in Vietnam, it is dedicated to all who served in the war, living and dead, Taglieri said.

All Faiths Chapel is dedicated to students killed during World War II and the Korean War, and Memorial Stadium is dedicated to students killed during World War I. The only memorial at K-State dedicated to those killed in Vietnam is a plaque which hangs in the Union and is dated 1969.

Arck said he came up the with the idea of building a larger memorial on Veteran's Day in 1986, when he noticed wreaths in front of All Faiths Chapel and Memorial Stadium, and flowers in front of the plaque in the Union. He decided it was inappropriate to have such a small and outdated memorial for the 38 K-Staters who lost their lives in Vietnam, he said.

Donations for the memorial can be sent to: KSU Vietnam Memorial Fund, KSU Foundation, 1408 Denison, Manhattan, Kan. 66506.

Regents stress building repairs

By Kendra Gensemer Collegian Reporter

TOPEKA - Maintenance of about 600 buildings on state university campuses leads the list of the Kansas Board of Regents' construction priorities for the 1989 Legislature.

Of the $7.96 million the regents will ask the Legislature to spend on what they consider their most important projects, $4 million would be spent on maintenance - an amount regents officials said they consider inadequate.

"We're trying to keep that in the forefront," Warren Corman, regents director of facilities, said of the maintenance request. "We've settled on the fact that if we get $4 million a year, maybe we could make a dent in this thing."

Regents also authorized the issuance of bonds to finance renovations of Holton Hall and construction of parking lots for Bramlage Coliseum.

The bonds will allow $785,000 of improvements on campus with revenue income through student support fees and parking fees said Allen Bell, president of Kansas Develop-

"These are two separate projects financed by one bond issue," Bell said. A portion of monies from student support fees will contribute to the financing of Holton Hall renovations, and a portion of monies from parking fees will help finance servicing and lighting for Bramlage.

"There will be no cross-liability," Bell said. If the revenue source for one project is smaller, it will not affect the other project, he said.

Regents also approved K-State's request to lease College Court Apartments, 1615 Anderson Ave., giving Continuing Education a place for expansion and development.

The 10-year, eight-month lease agreement will involve a total commitment of $875,988, subject to cancellation with a one-year notice, said Ted Ayres, general counsel for the Board of Regents.

There is no automatic option to renew the lease, he said. The length of the lease relates to the availability of the building.

Ayres said all public utilities and furnishings will be paid by K-State. Renovations and changes will be paid for by KSU Foundation, which will also be required to maintain

House cuts handgun language from bill

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - The pro-gun lobby won a major victory Thursday when the House eliminated from a major anti-drug bill a seven-day waiting period for handgun purchases.

The 228-182 vote substituted a plan - still to be established - that would allow gun dealers to identify convicted felons seeking to buy

The margin showed the National Rifle Association was able to outmuscle a coalition of handgun control organizations and allies from all the nation's major law enforcement groups. Both sides brought rank-andfile law enforcement officers to the Capitol to lobby for their cause.

Voting for the substitute sponsored by Rep. Bill McCollum, R-Fla., were 101 Democrats and 127 Republicans. Opposing were 137 Democrats and 45 Republicans.

The overall drug bill would add some $2 billion to the nation's $3.9 billion drug fighting effort. A final House vote is expected next week. The Senate still has to consider its own drug fighting bill.

The waiting period would have permitted police where the purchaser lives to conduct a background check, but would not have required one.

In the closing moments of debate, waiting period supporter William J. Hughes, D-N.J., urged members to "show how tough we are when it comes to bucking the National Rifle Association and the gun lobby."

NRA backer Rep. Harold Volkmer, D-Mo., said after the vote that those comments backfired.

"Taking on the NRA is one thing and taking on gun owners is another," Volkmer said. "There's no question the NRA had a lot to do with it," he said, but attributed most of the substitute's support to individual gun owners who contacted their lawmakers.

Even President Reagan's support for a waiting period - although not the specific language in the drug bill - wasn't enough

Rep. Edward F. Feighan, D-Ohio, author of the waiting period, commented, "I do think we were outgunned by the forces of the National Rifle Association, and their very effective campaign of deceit and distortion."

Wichita crowd hears Quayle

By Chris Doll Features Editor

WICHITA - Dan Quayle told an audience here - about a third of who were protesting his political positions - he was confident "Kansas will not let George Bush down."

The GOP vice-presidential candidate flew into Wichita Thursday for a two-day campaign tour of Kansas. He is expected to make speeches and meet with supporters in Johnson County and suburban Kansas City, Mo., today.

About 600 people stood on a tarmac of a private aircraft charter company and listened to Quayle castigate Democratic candidate Michael Dukakis for his positions on taxes, child care and national defense.

"There's a lot of things you could call the governor of Massachusetts. We could refer to him as 'Mr. Tax Increase.' We could call him 'Mr. Polluter.' We could call him 'Mr.

Weak on National Defense," he said. "But he could never be called 'Mr. President."

While Dukakis has been governor of Massachusetts, he has raised taxes five times and the state's harbors have become polluted, Quayle said. Also, Dukakis has only recently shown interest in the national defense, Quayle said. "George Bush understands the importance of investing in national defense to secure your freedom," he said. "Dukakis and defense - that's a contradiction in terms. I'll tell you that."

The Republicans can take credit for the health of the present economy and the nation's security, and George Bush knows how to build on that strength, Quayle said.

"We are not going to turn it over to some inexperienced liberal Democrat from Massachusetts," he said. Some in the crowd, however, were not so quick to thank the Republicans for their present conditions.

Gray McCray, who wore a T-shirt saying, "Save American Jobs," said he was laid off at Cessna Aircraft Co. in Wichita at the beginning of Reagan's presidency. He now is a member of the Aircraft Workers' Union and does menial labor jobs.

'Not for sale' books often

Textbooks labeled "Complimentary copy - not for resale" may have been just that, but according to bookstore managers, the textbooks were not complimentary to them.

Book department manager at the Union, Ginger Morris, said she wants students to know the Union pays for those books even though they're stamped complimentary. The stamp is often covered by a black "Another quality used book"

"It is not a complimentary book to us. We do not get free books from publishers, because we are in the business to sell books," Morris

Some publishers send books to professors as promotional material. use the books are often unsolicited by the professors, Morris said, some professors believe they have the right to sell them or keep them.

"The teachers who sell the (complimentary) books have a point," she said. "They didn't request the books, so they figure they can do what they want with them.
"The bookstores get caught in the middle. We don't want to cause problems, and it looks bad when students think they are paying for a book that we didn't have to buy. That is absolutely not the case." Morris said.

Varney's Book Store in Aggieville asks its wholesalers not to send books that have been marked.

"complimentary copy," said Dan Walter, Varney's book department

"We request that (the wholesalers) not send them. But in their processing, the wholesalers put the stickers on the books and sometimes we get them. By the time we get the books, we have paid for them and it is merchandise to sell. We didn't get the books for free, so we sell them," Walter said.

Varney's also refuses to buy complimentary books from professors. However, it will buy the stamped books from students, assuming the students paid for the

"It is not fair to the students if they paid for the book, to not buy them back," Walter said.

Wholesale textbook companies acquire free copies from professors by sending representatives, "job-bers," to universities to try to buy complimentary books, said Frank Condello, public relations spokes-man for The Nebraska Book Company in Lincoln, Neb. The Nebraska company does not send representatives to ask for books, but will purchase them, Condello said.

"We let the bookstore know that if professors want to get rid of their comp copies, we will send some-body to purchase them and the bookstore will get a commission." Condello said: "We are to a point now where we don't want to damage our reputation. But we are in a ■ See BOOKS, Page 10

Camping guidelines

Collegian Reporter

Student Senate approved official guidelines Thursday for students wanting to camp out by Ahearn Field House to buy season basketball

Many administrators, faculty members and students were concerned that the early camping by students may endanger the academic success of those involved, prompting action by Senate. The official camping guidelines for 1988 are as follows:

At some point in the near future, the first phase of the camp out will officially be ended. At that time, all groups presently in line will have their names recorded in the order they arrived at the site.

Then, at an arbitrarily determined future date, a purple flag will be raised on the Anderson Hall flagpole, signaling the opening of the second phase of the camp out.

When the flag goes up, groups previously listed will have until 9 p.m. that day to re-claim their places in line. The groups need not arrive in their initial order to re-claim their original place. They need only be back on the campsite by the designated 9 p.m. cutoff. Any group that did not have a place in line during phase one will be added to the list in the order of their ■ See SENATE, Page 12

Pope saddened by hijacking

MASERU, Lesotho - Pope John Paul II on Thursday comforted pilgrims injured in a bus hijacking in this mountain kingdom and criticized militants who believe violence can solve southern Africa's conflicts.

"I am saddened to learn that others on their way to join me on this pilgrimage have been victims of a hijack that has caused such anguish and ended in bloodshed," John Paul said the day after police stormed the bus with four hijackers and 71 hostages aboard.

All four hijackers and two passengers died, including a 14-year-old girl, officials said. Twenty others were injured.

U.S. to cut back on diplomats

WASHINGTON - With American diplomats in Panama facing a variety of problems, the United States has decided to reduce the size of its diplomatic presence in the troubled country, State Department officials said Thursday.

The decision was taken at the advice of Ambassador Arthur Davis and could result in the closing or the severe reduction of the regional operations of the Drug Enforcement Administration, the Justice Department and the U.S. Customs Service, the officials told The Associated Press.

The extent of the cutback was not immediately determined, but one of the officials said up to 160 jobs could be affected.

"We're doing it because the lessons of history have taught us that when we are in a potentially confrontational situation, it makes sense to reduce potential vulnerability," one of the offi-

has canceled all normal dealings with the country. Residents flee hurricane site

BROWNSVILLE, Texas - Thousands of coastal residents from Mexico to Louisiana fled to higher ground Thursday as fierce Hurricane Gilbert sent the first of its storms against Texas after thrashing the Yucatan Peninsula.

"This is a killer storm," said Gordon Guthrie, director of the Florida Division of Emergency of Management. "I feel sorry for anybody wherever this hits."

The death toll from the storm's onslaught through the Caribbean islands and the Yucatan was at least 47, and damage estimates reached $8 billion. Jamaican Prime Minister Edward Seaga declared a one-month state of emergency.

By early evening, the first thunderstorms and showers in the outermost spiral bands of the storm had reached southeast Texas, forecasters said.

AIDS cases to increase

ATLANTA - The nation will have five times as many AIDS cases in four years, with 365,000 cases by 1992, the Centers for Disease Control predicted Thursday.

As of this week, 72,766 AIDS cases have been reported to the CDC, with 41,064 patients, or 56 percent, already dead. By the end of 1992, the number of cases will total 365,000, and deaths will reach 263,000, or 72 percent of the predicted case total, the CDC said. The predictions came in a report summarizing the CDC's latest quarterly report on AIDS to the White House's Domestic Policy Council. The CDC in 1986 issued its AIDS predictions for 1991, which call for 270,000 cases by the end of that year. Actual AIDS reporting has run slightly higher than predicted; the agency in 1986 predicted 15,800 cases in 1986 and 23,000 in 1987, while the actual totals were 17,100 and 25,200, respectively. "We think they're very close," said Dr. Tim Dondero, a CDC AIDS specialist. "I think the message is that, at least for the first couple of years, this ... method gives some pretty reliable estimates."

In the report released Thursday, the Atlanta-based health agency predicts 80,000 cases of AIDS in 1992 alone, with 66,000 deaths that year. A total of 172,000 living AIDS patients will require medical care in 1992, at a cost of anywhere from $5 billion to $13 billion, the CDC predicted.

Speeder warns motorists

PITTSBURGH — John Thiry says he was doing motorists a favor when he held up a sign telling them to slow down, but police on the lookout for speeders nearby weren't impressed with his citizenship.

They arrested him. "I stopped a lot of people from having a miserable day," said Thiry, who acknowledges wracking up $2,000 in traffic fines over the years. "People were beeping at me. They were waving. It's about time somebody did something.'

Thiry, 22, was arrested Wednesday for obstructing traffic after he stood in a street called Schenley Park Plaza with a sign saying, "Slow down. Police ahead with VASCAR."

Thiry was just ahead of where police were using a VASCAR device to catch speeders. The device, akin to a stop watch, calculates a car's speed by measuring the time it takes for a car to travel between two lines painted across the street a carefully measured distance apart.

"I stood there for about 20 minutes," Thiry said.

Symptoms of chlamydia differ; K-Stater developing test LaFemme Clinic tests women

By Audra Dietz Staff Writer

This infection is three times more common than gonorrhea, and it's 30 times more common than syphilis. It's scientific name is chlamydia trachomatis, but is better known as "the clap."

The clap is transmitted by sexual contact and it affects men and women, said Dr. Thomas Ryan of Lafene Student Health Center. Physicians at Lafene now test all women for chlamydia when they come in for a routine Pap smear and physical exam, Ryan said.

"We started screening all women a year ago," he said. Between September 1987 and January 1988, 800 women were tested for the infection, and about 64 cases were diagnosed positive, Ryan said.

Men are also screened, but on a voluntary basis, he said.

"We do test men by examining a urine sample for white cells," Ryan

There were no figures available on men diagnosed with chlamydia.

Ryan said physicians at Lafene started testing all women because 80 percent of those who are infected don't have symptoms, and too many cases were going undetected.

Men are just the opposite. Seventy percent of men with the clap do have symptoms, which include burning during urination and a watery or milky discharge, Ryan said.

Most men treated for chlamydia at Lafene are self-referred, Ryan said, since they do show symptoms. Therefore, mandatory testing isn't necessary.

"The clap" is a problematic disease because it affects men, women and children," Ryan said. Fifty percent of children born to mothers with chlamydia acquire eye and lung infections, he said.

"Chlamydia is the most common sexually transmitted disease," said Cathy Barry, a registered nurse at which specializes in women's services. Chlamydia is classified as a micro-organism since it has some characteristics of a bacteria and some characteristics of a virus.

"It lives inside a host cell, like a virus, but it's not a virus," Ryan said. In men, chlamydia settles in the urethra after sexual contact, causing the urinary tract to become inflamed in one to three weeks.

In women, chlamydia makes its home in the cervix. In about three weeks, the cervix becomes inflamed.

"Many people think if you don't have symptoms, you don't have (the infection). And that's not the case at all," he said.

If the infection is not treated, blindness and pelvic inflammatory disease can result, he said.

Unlike herpes, the clap is curable. Two antibiotics, Doxycycline and Tetracycline, taken by mouth for 7 to 10 days usually kill the organism in both men and women, he said. The increase of chlamydia among women is due to having multiple sexual partners, and relying on nonbarrier contraceptives like "the pill," he said. Ryan said condoms will reduce the risk of infection.

"Condoms lower the risk of spreading all sexually transmitted diseases," he said. "It's good, common sense to use protection."

The increase of all venereal diseases has changed the focus of contraceptives, he said. Using "double contraception" - a condom and another method, such as a diaphragm or spermacide - increases protection against VDs, not just pregnancy, he said.

Ryan said men should take more responsibility with birth control.

"Women have carried the burden of all this, (birth control) for too many years. At some point, the man must exercise some responsibility by using condoms," he said.

When testing a woman for chlamydia, the doctor inserts a small LaFemme — a division of Lafene brush into the cervix to remove cells. The cell culture is sent to the Rema Lab in Springfield, Mo. for processing, Barry said. It takes seven to 10 days to get the results.

"If we're suspicious that there is an infection, we don't wait to hear from the lab. We start the antibiotics right away," Ryan said.

When the results of the chlamydia test are positive, the Missouri lab notifies Lafene immediately. The patient is then contacted by the health center and is advised to inform his or her partner(s), Ryan said. All chlamydia cases must be reported to the state health department, but it's up to the patients to inform their sexual contact(s), he said.

Cases of syphilis and gonorrhea are also reported to the state health department.

When a case of syphilis or gonorrhea is reported, the state contacts the partner(s) who could possibly be infected. The state intervenes to help stop the spread of the diseases and because of the emotion involved, Ryan said.

"There's always hard feelings," Ryan said. "Most people don't believe it when we tell them the test is positive."

Having several sexual partners greatly increases the risk of catching VDs, Ryan said, and personal fidelity is no guarantee of safety.

"If your partner has had 10 other contacts, and you have had only one, then you've also been exposed to everyone your partner had contacts with," he said.

The test for chlamydia adds $15 to the patient's bill, but Barry says it's

"It's expensive, but it's for the patients' benefit," she said.

Ryan said there's no sure-fire method to avoid infection, but all precautions should be taken.

A faster and more accurate test for chlamydia, a venereal disease commonly known as "the clap," is being developed by Ed Daniels, veterinary diagnostician at K-State.

The test will be suitable to test animals and humans for the infection and will also be less expensive than traditional testing methods, Daniels

"Testing (in the past) has been time consuming and expensive," Daniels said in the Spring 1988 issue of Perspectives, a magazine reporting research on campus.

The current testing method takes one day to detect chlamydia from tissue, and it takes two weeks to get results from a feces sample, said Robert Phillips, professor of veterinary diagnosis.

Daniels' test gives results in only a few hours.

Chlamydia exists in two strains: psittaci, the strain found in animals, and trachomatis, the strain infecting humans. Both strains can be transmitted between animals and humans. Daniels said the risk of infection is so high that he warns pregnant women to not help with lambing or calving.

"You can catch (chlamydia) from birds just by being in the same room with them," Phillips said.

The semen of cattle and horses also carries the infection, and has been tracked from pasture to pasture after mating season, according to Perspectives.

Chlamydia passed from humans to animals and from humans to other humans causes lung infections and flu-like symptoms, said Phillips.

cells, Daniels told Perspectives. Daniels uses monoclonal transport in his research by putting a fluorescent dye on the antibody, so when it contacts chlamydia, it glows in the dark under the microscope.

The K-State diagnostic lab is accredited by the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services to test for both strains of chlamydia in humans and in animals. Before the accreditation, cultures had to be sent to an independent lab for testing, and only tests for the psittaci strain could "Not many labs in the world work on chlamydia," Daniels told Perspectives.

Daniels said he wants to find a better vaccine to protect livestock, and one that is more reliable than vaccines used now.

Daniels is a veterinarian working on his doctorate in molecular virology. He is on an extended leave of absence and, thus, was unavailable for a personal interview.

Souvenir NASA photo stolen from biology display window

By The Collegian Staff

A souvenir NASA photo presented to the the Division of Biology following a seminar in May was stolen from a full display case in Ackert Hall during the past weekend.

Ken Buyle, director of the department, said the photograph was of a space shuttle launch and was presented to him by astronaut Mary Cleave.

Cleave conducted a seminar with members of the biology department on May 10, 1988.

Buyle said none of the other photographs from the burglarized case appeared to have been taken. It seems someone broke the lock, shuttle launch and left the others in the display case, he said.

The lock on the case has been strengthened since the photograph was stolen, he said. "The picture has no significant monetary value," Buyle said.

However, he said, it has a lot of sentimental value within the department since it was donated as a parting gift from Cleave after her visit and seminar.

Buyle said he did not report the selected the picture of the space theft to K-State Police because he did not want to make a big issue of the loss of the photograph.

As soon as the people who stole the photograph are finished with it, the department wants the picture returned to the main office, he said, with no questions asked.

Death of Pakistani leader Zia gives country brighter future

t last, after 11 years of military rule in Pakistan, General Zia ul-Haq's dictatorship has come to an end. If it was not for the recent plane crash which killed Zia, there would not have been new elections for the presidency until 1990. Pakistan has not had a democratic election since March 1977 when former Prime Minister Zulfikar Ali Bhutto won an overwhelming victory of 164 out of 200 seats in the National Assembly. Because of the extent of Bhutto's lead, opposition leaders contended that the elections were rigged.

MVERSAL PRESS SYND

Responding to the accusations and confident of his popularity, Bhutto agreed to have a recall election. It was during Bhutto's dialogue with the opposition that Zia (who was then army chief of staff) overthrew the government and arrested Bhutto, who was the most popular civilian politician in 32 years of Pakistani independence. Zia then appointed himself as the president of Pakistan.

In a broadcast to the nation, Zia promised to have elections in October 1977, to return the country to civilian rule and to allow Bhutto to run in the election. These were the first of his lies. Not only did the elections not take place, but Bhutto was executed because of the fear that he would win if permitted to run.

On Oct. 1, 1977, Zia announced the indefinite postponement of elections. He feared having elections at a time when Bhutto's charisma was strong enough to lead the People's Party to victory. Zia postponed elections several times after that on one pretext or another. He tried to legitimize military rule and gain support by labeling his rule "Islamic," but what he actually did was consolidate his own personal power, rather than establishing an Islamic order.

Zia ordered the arrest of thousands of opposition leaders and others who may have proven to be a "disruptive influence" to his vision of "Islamic democracy." After eight years of martial law, due to non-cooperation movements, strikes, coup attempts and pressure from other countries, Zia agreed to have Commentary SHEIKH ZAKIR SIDDIQUI Guest elections. But the election was subject to several restrictions. All candidates were required to run as independents (no political parties), candidates were not permitted to hold outdoor meetings or rallies, and loudspeakers and microphones were banned. Thousands of people perceived as threats to Zia's power were arrested.

Columnist

Perhaps one of the most despicable acts Zia committed was his arrest and execution of President Bhutto, a populist reformer who was particularly popular with the poor laboreconomic reforms, negotiated the release of ic aid. nearly 90,000 prisoners of war and gave Pakistan its longest period of civilian rule in three decades. As it became evident to world leaders that Bhutto would be executed, pleas for his release came from many, including Jimmy Carter, Leonid Brezhnev, Anwar el-Sadat and Pope John Paul II.

In an attempt to keep the Pakistani people in the dark and to avoid protests, the selfappointed government carried out the death sentence in secrecy. The time of execution was moved up four hours from 6 a.m. to 2 a.m. so that Bhutto's body could be buried before the news got out to the citizens. Three journalists on the scene were arrested to keep the news from getting out.

hutto's daughter, Benazir Bhutto, is the acting head of her father's Pakistani People's Party. During Zia's reign, the government went to extraordinary levels to insure that Benazir Bhutto wouldn't disrupt the iron-fist rule. At Karachi International Airport, security officals checked the identities of veiled women returning from overseas after informing Bhutto that she would be arrested upon arrival if she dared to enter Pakistan.

I'M GOING BACK TO COVERING GOLF.

In August of 1986, Bhutto and 2,000 dissidents were arrested due to anti-government riots around the country and even now she is put under house arrest whenever she is in Pakistan.

Bhutto has proven her ability to draw crowds like no one else in Pakistan's short history. The People's Party is the biggest and most powerful mass-based group in the country, drawing strength from peasants, labor unions and students.

The United States has an unusual stake in the events taking place in Pakistan. Since the 1950s, Pakistan has been a key element in the American policy toward South Asia. After the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan in 1979, the United States viewed Pakistan as a frontline state against communism and granted ers and farmers. He initiated political and Pakistan $3.2 billion in military and economhope that the intention of the future leader of Pakistan will be to forge a place for Pakistan in the history of the world instead of a place for himself atop a bureaucratic military reign. A leader who would put the nation's best interest before his or her own interests will be a welcome change.

I would like to think that my country is housing Afghanistan refugees and aiding in their struggle against domination because it is the right thing to do, not because it is politically advantageous to a superpower.

Zia's fatal end can realistically mean a brighter future for Pakistan, a future in which the fate of the people is in the hands of the people — where it belongs.

Lighting provides safety on streets

By Shane Applegate Collegian Reporter

A shining porch light is often a welcome sight for students returning to an off-campus residence from an evening on campus especially after having to leave the safety of a well-lit campus for a dark side-street.

Students should avoid routes home that do not provide the best lighting, said Lt. Steve French of the Riley County Police Department

"It just makes good common sense to stay in a lighted area," French said.

The responsibility of the police is to report lights that are out and need maintenance by "notifying the proper people," he said

But for students who do not have the option of taking a better lighted route home, there is an alternative that might make those late-evening trips a little safer. By process of petitioning the Manhattan City Commission, students can take action in requesting additional street lights, said Heide Clark, Manhattan city clerk.

"Write the commission through the city engineer's office," Clark said, but there is no guarantee the city commission will pass the motion for additional lighting.

The success of the student petitioners starts with acquiring as many names as possible for the petition, Clark said. The more names on the petition, the more likely the city engineer will pass along the recommendation to the commission, she said.

Clark said, according to city records, there have been no street lights added by petition in the past

"The only lights that have been added have been either in new additions or rezoning," Clark

The petitioning process begins at the city engineer's office, said Jerry Petty, city engineer, but the first contact he receives from residents over lights is not in the form of petitions.

By sending a formal request for additional street lighting in the form of a petition, residents can set the wheels in motion, according to the city resolution.

The city engineer's office passes along recommendations for new street lights for approval by the City Commission, and the time to get the recommendation on the agenda usually takes two to three weeks, Clark said.

The main consideration for those petitioning the City of Manhattan for a new street light is that at some time, in accordance with city resolution, there must be approval by a resident in that block to have a street light installed on his or her property.

If a petition for an additional street light has the support of the neighbors it affects, and the approval of the City Commission, there is a better chance for students walking home at night to do so on a safely lighted street, Clark

New alumni directors to take office

By Amy Lyons Collegian Reporter

Fred Thibodeau and Amy Button Renz will take over the leadership of the K-State Alumni Association today.

Thibodeau, who will serve as executive director, said his main goals for the office are to achieve "intensive growth" in the association, and to establish a closer relationship between the University and its alumni.

Button Renz will serve as associate director for the association.

Thibodeau, a 1974 K-State graduate, replaces Larry Weigel as the association's head.

"With Larry Weigel we had one of the best executive directors in the nation," said National Alumni President Earl McVicker upon announcing the appointment. "He led the alumni association to excellence in areas of membership growth, program development and service to our members, and today the K-State Alumni Association is recognized as one of the premier associations in the Big Eight and in the nation.

'In Fred Thibodeau, we have found an equally outstanding successor," McVicker said.

McVicker, the alumni association board of directors, and a search committee selected Thibodeau as executive director.

Since May 1, Thibodeau has served as the associate director of the alumni association.

He is currently completing his doctorate in higher education administration.

Thibodeau, outlining his goals for the association, complimented Weigel's efforts as executive director. He said under Weigel's 10-year guidance, the alumni association grew tremendously.

The K-State Alumni Association currently has more than 27,500 members, which is the highest percentage of active alumni members of all Big Eight Conference schools.

"Where there's been extensive growth over the last 10 years, I feel the growth we are going to be taking now is more intensive," Thibodeau said. "We'll try to focus on those areas that are important to the alumni and the the University collectively."

He said the example of student recruitment was an accurate representation of his goal, as it was a cumulative effort by the K-State administration, as well as the alumni and other groups.

Where the University programs and interests intersect with the desires and interests of the alumni association, we need to be working together," he said. "A good example of that is student recruitment. It's absolutely essential that we maintain the level of new students we have achieved."

Strong alumni commitment helped draw him back to K-State, Thibodeau said.

"The level of support and commitment the alumni have for Kansas said. "I have no desire to be anywhere else. This is the only state university in the country for which I would consider to work."

Button Renz, Thibodeau's replacement as associate director, said she was also impressed with the support of K-State alumni, adding that the projected budget income for the association this year is $1 million.

Thibodeau said that new development in association programs includes allowing alumni to participate "on all levels." He said he felt graduates could be called upon to contribute in a wide variety of ways.

"I want everyone to feel good about the contribution they make, no matter how small," he said.

Citing examples of new student recruitment and legislative programs as areas where alumni could make significant contributions, Thibodeau said he wanted greater participation from graduates.

"I believe there are a lot of K-Staters out there who would do just about anything for the University,' he said. "We are going to be developing programs to allow them to give back to the University a part of what was given to them.'

Originally from Connecticut, Thibodeau said he and his wife and sons Michael, 10, and Matthew, 13, are very happy to return to Manhattan.

Button Renz graduated from K-State in 1976 and 1986. She started with the alumni association in 1977, she said.

Button Renz said she'll be working primarily in four areas with the association: special promotions, the affinity - or credit card - program, the fund drive and merchandizing.

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan — Afghan air raids and shellings across the Pakistan border have killed 40 people and injured 114 since Soviet troops began leaving Afghanistan on May 15, a government spokesman said Thursday.

Afghan troops violated Pakistani air space and territory 295 times from May 15 to Aug. 18, the Pakistani official charged.

Pakistan, Afghanistan, the United States and the Soviet Union signed a U.N.-sponsored accord on April 14 to arrange a pullout of an estimated 115,000 Soviet troops that have been helping the Afghan government fight U.S.-backed rebels. Half of them have gone home, while the rest are to leave by Feb. 15.

The official, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said 27 people were killed and 85 injured in Afghan artillery shelling of Pakistani border areas. He said 13 died and 29 were injured in air raids and bombings.

He told reporters that more Afghan aircraft have been violating Pakistani air space in recent WARSAW, Poland - Lech Walesa met for four hours with government officials Thursday and stuck to his position that "there is no freedom without Solidarity."

Walesa, the chairman of the banned independent union movement, and Interior Minister Gen. Czeslaw Kiszczak agreed to continue working toward an early start of talks on the future of Poland.

"The problems are very difficult

The government agreed to the talks after Walesa agreed to halt a wave of strikes last month that posed the most serious threat to the government since Solidarity was crushed in

After the meeting, Krzysztof Sliwinski, a journalist close to Solidarity, said "both sides are not terribly far apart as far as the basic things are concerned."

But he said the two sides still must negotiate how a relegalized Solidarity would differ from the Solidarity of the early 1980s, and under what conditions it would operate.

Kiszczak and Walesa scheduled another meeting for Friday with an expanded group of people to agree on topics, composition and the work schedule for the meeting, the staterun PAP news service said.

Festivals offer diversity

By The Collegian Staff

It is the weekend, again, The bars are too crowded and studying just doesn't sound appealing after a week of classes.

Well, have no fear, festival time is here.

As the hot summer temperatures taper off and cooler breezes invade Kansas, fall festivals begin to crop

Many of these festivals provide an entire day of food and fun.

Don't worry about having to travel too far for them either, some are located in the Manhattan area and others are just a few hours drive. For starters, there is the 12th annual Renaissance Festival in Kansas City. It will run every weekend from now through Oct. 16. Rick Darnell, spokesman for the Kansas City Renaissance Festival, said there will be authentic 16th century vocal and instrumental music, magicians, jugglers, street acts and much more. Workers in the booths and actors involved in the street acts will be clad in costumes of the Renaissance. Food booths, run directly by the festival officials, will also carry authentic dishes of the era, such as strudel and roasted turkey legs.

Several art displays will be shown at the festival. Many artists competed to enter their work in the Renaissance Festival, but not everyone could be included, Darnell said.

The aritsts are chosen by the amount of space available and examples of their work.

"Their work must continue the (Renaissance) theme," Darnell said. Anyone looking for a little entertainment with a touch of the past can find the Renaissance festival on State Avenue, near the Sandstone Amphitheater in Bonner Springs.

Proceeds will benefit the Kansas City Art Institute.

Come rain or shine, the 16th Annual Walnut Valley Festival will be Sept. 15-18 at the Cowley County Fairgrounds in Winfield.

Those attending are encouraged to camp out on the fairgrounds during the festival.

Nina Williams of the Walnut Valley Association said this year there will be new entertainment and crafts at the festival. Approximately 10,000 people from all 50 states and 15 foreign countries are expected to turn out for this year's festival, Williams said. There will be a songwriting competition with eight instrumental categories during the festival. More than $23,000 will be awarded to the winners. Various musical workshops

Alumni exhibit

Alumni are an important part of any university.

However, when students graduate, they often lose touch with their alma mater.

The K-State Department of Art realizes the importance of alumni and, in an attempt to keep them in contact with the University, is honoring their former graduates in an exhibit.

In conjunction with K-State's 125th anniversary and Homecoming, the K-State Art Department is presenting an invitational alumni art exhibit.

The exhibit represents a crosssection of works from Art Department graduates of the past 25 years, said Rosella Ogg, instructor of art and co-chairperson of the exhibit committee.

Metal jewelry, sculptures, prints, drawings, graphic designs, ceramics and paintings will be on display in the Union Art Gallery from now until Oct. 7.

One of the requirements of the exhibit, Ogg said, was that the artists displaying their works had received either a master's or bachelor's degree in art or fine arts and are still involved in that area.

"We either had to have heard about them and their work or a member of the faculty suggested them for the exhibit," she said.

The department sent letters to 36 artists asking them to submit pieces for the exhibit.

Of the 36 artists contacted, 29 responded and 26 were chosen to submit one of their recent works.

The artists chose the piece they wanted displayed in the exhibit, Ogg

Although it was not planned, the exhibit includes pieces from each area taught in the department, she

Ogg said it was very interesting to see how some of the artists had undergone changes in their work. "Some of the students were three dimensional when they were here and then went into different mediums during their masters' programs," she Works in the exhibit range from jewelry from a local metal smith to a painting by an artist now residing in New York City.

"These people represent a strong cross-section from across the United States," Ogg said.

"I think, for many of the artists, this is a willingness to recognize their K-State connection," she said. "It lets the artists feed back to the University what they have gotten."

"Some of the contributors yearly donate a piece of their work for our annual art scholarship auction," she

"It is nice to be able to respond to a request from your school as an artist," said Barbara Terell Pujol, a local metal smith who has several pieces of her jewelry on display.

"As an artist, you may not always have the money to donate to the school so it is nice to be able to give (the school) something to look at," she said.

Pujol sells her jewelry to studios and galleries across the country, as well as to the Saks Fifth Avenue department store.

Pujol said she thought the display was not only something for the alumni to enjoy, but for students as well. "It is important that the younger students, such as freshmen and sophomores, see that they can make a living," Pujol said. "There are a lot of opportunities in art.

"When most students think of art, they think of paintings, but the art department offers many other possibilities, such as metal smithing," Pujol said. "A lot of schools don't offer (metal smithing). We're lucky.'

The Department of Art has sent special invitations for the Homecoming weekend to those artists who contributed works to the exhibit.

The department is planning to entertain those who attend.

The Union gallery will be opened the Saturday of Homecoming so that alumni can view the display.

"It is nice to be able to see what other alumni are doing," Pujol said.

pounding the pavement for jobs, starring in "B" movies, just waiting for the perfect role.

Jack Noah, played by Richard Dreyfuss, is the main character in Paul Mazursky's new film, "Moon Over Parador."

Dreyfuss plays the part of an overworked, underpaid actor who has strayed far away from his dreams of Broadway. "Moon Over Parador" opens on the set of a low budget film which is being shot in the mythical Latin American country of Parador. Leading man, Jack Noah, appears on screen, sporting the Don Johnson-look. In a 15-second scene from his movie, Noah's character woos a woman, gets shot and tumbles off the roof of an open-air cafe.

Exciting, right? Well, Jack doesn't think so. There is something missing from Jack's work: substance. The opportunity every actor craves. A chance to test one's abilities in the "perfect role."

Jack soon gets the opportunity to put his talents to the test.

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA - The State Board of Education brought its recommendations today for improving the state's minimum competency testing program to a skeptical legislative committee.

The board wants to continue the tests on an annual basis and to give them to second-, fourth-, sixth-, eighth- and 10th- graders during the spring. It also wants to put more emphasis on making sure the tests are used by school districts to help students who do poorly on them and to change the emphasis of the tests in the later grades.

However, some members of the Legislative Educational Planning Committee said they're not sure teachers like having to give the tests, especially when districts give other standardized tests on top of the state

"It seems everybody's totally sold on it except the Legislature," said Sen. Jim Allen, R-Ottawa. "There's still an awful lot of questions on this in the Legislature.'

Currently, districts are required to give the reading and mathematics tests annually to students in the second, fourth, sixth, eighth and 10th cally required to use the results of the tests in their teaching.

The Board of Education wants to ensure that test results are included in student records that follow the student from school to school.

However, doing that would raise the cost of the test from about $1.60

In fact, the board wants to increase spending on the tests from $294,697 currently to $563,916 by 1991.

"The state board believes that a statewide testing program is essential to quality education in this state," said Board Member Kathleen White

Under the board's proposal, eighth- and 10th-graders would be tested for "adult functional literacy," and the tests would rely less upon traditional reading and math questions.

"For example, it may be important for a 10th-grade student to be able to read a road map," White said.

Some legislators said they were concerned that teachers are wary of the tests because many districts give at least one other during the year, and some give two others.

"I'm not convinced that we spend too much time in testing," Jackson

Rep. Jesse Harder, D-Buhler, responded: "The perception is

Others questioned whether results would reach the students' next teachers if the tests are given in the spring, before graduation. Sen. ## Koreans impressed, hopeful for Olympic games' success

By Richard Broadfoot Staff Writer

At the opening ceremonies of the Los Angeles Olympic Games four years ago, the mood was bright and the expectations were high.

Almost as if by magic, the smog lifted, the traffic unsnarled and there were no signs of terrorists or freeway snipers. It seemed nothing, save the boycott by the Eastern Bloc countries, could go wrong. Nothing did. But today, as the 1988 Olympic Games begin in Seoul, South Korea, the mood is one of apprehension.

Riots, student protests, and the constant threat of terrorism by North Korea, the Japanese Red Army and others looms ominously over the Seoul games.

However, one K-State professor said he believes the situation may not be so bad, at least where the student protesters are concerned.

"A year, or a year and a half ago, I was worried about the student protests, but now that I know they have no popular support, I am not worried," said Do Sup Chung, professor of agriculture engineering and adviser to the Korean Student Association.

Chung was raised in Korea, but has lived in the United States since 1954. Since then he has been a frequent visitor to South Korea, and he was in Seoul in August.

"The (student protesters) are not supported by the general public," Chung said. "The day I arrived (in Seoul), there was a protest near where my nephew lives. The traffic was jammed, and the truck drivers, the taxi drivers and the shop owners were all shaking their fists and velling at the protesters to stop. They have no support."

The protesters are calling for an end to the authoritarian rule under which South Korea has struggled for the past 40 years, and for a reunification with North Korea. But Chung, at least, said he believes that the protesters have little to protest about.

"It was a shock to me how much better things are now (in South Korea). In December, they had free elections for the first time in 43 years. They now have freedom of the press, and the standard of living is much higher. Democracy is new to Korea. I think the students are just impatient," Chung said.

Chung also said he believes that televised reports of the protests may have misled many into believing that the situation in Seoul is worse than it is.

"We are talking about a tiny minority of radical students, maybe a few thousand, in a country of 40 million," Chung said.

Although Chung said the student radicals pose little threat, he stops short of saying the games will go off without a hitch.

With or without hitches, South Korea will receive a considerable amount of media coverage during the next few weeks. Chung said he would like to see the publicity do for Korea what the 1964 Olympics did for Japan - improve the image of a beleaguered country.

"People look at Korea and they see 'M*A*S*H," Chung said. Chung said he would like to see that type of image washed away so that people can see South Korea for what it has accomplished.

Chul-Ho Choi, graduate in agriculture engineering and former president of the Korean Student Association, hasn't been back to Korea in four years, and he said what he has seen on TV has impressed him.

"I am amazed to see what has been constructed," Choi said after watching the previews of the Olympic Games on NBC. "I think it is great. I am really very happy.

Chung agrees. "Of all the countries that achieved independence after 1945,

I would rate South Korea number one," Chung said.

Suit charges ballot inadequate

By The Associated Press

LINCOLN, Neb. - Lancaster County District Judge Jeffre Cheuvront heard oral arguments Thursday in a suit filed by a physician who wants the language changed in Initiative 402, the measure that would allow voters to remove the state from a five-state nuclear waste compact.

David J. Hoelting of Pender asked the Lancaster County District Court to require that the ballot language specify that Nebraska would be subject to penalties, obligations and other liabilities if the state abandons the regional compact for the disposal of low-level nuclear waste.

The five states are Nebraska, Kansas, Oklahoma, Louisiana and Arkansas.

But Assistant Attorney General Dale Comer argued that ballot titles should be neutral.

Attorneys for Hoelting, who served on Gov. Kay Orr's advisory committee on the waste compact, said the language that will appear on the ballot contains no reference to penalties Nebraska taxpayers would face if Nebraska pulls out of the compact.

Attorney Larry Ruth argued that the ballot language is "unfair and insufficient and gives the implication that withdrawal from the compact washes our hands" of the matter.

Co-counsel Steven Seglin said federal law states that withdrawal from the Central Interstate Low-Level Radioactive Waste Compact doesn't relieve states of legal Comer said any legal penalties are purely speculative at this time.

Let the Summer Olympic Games begin

Volleyball, baseball coaches offer views on Seoul-bound teams

By Chris Hays Sports Writer

Editor's Note: This is the last of a two-part series on K-State's coaches' input on the 1988 Summer Olympic Games which begin today in Seoul, South Korea.

Opening ceremonies for the XXIV Olympic Games in Seoul, South Korea, are tonight and the games will begin on Saturday.

Attending the games from K-State are Mitch Richmond, the former Wildcat who made the U.S. men's basketball team, and Steve Miller, K-State athletic director. Miller, who is scheduled to arrive in Seoul on Tuesday, is making the trip with a contingent of Special Olympics' representatives.

Before taking over as athletic director at K-State, Miller was executive director of the Pennsylvania Special Olympics.

Also on the roster of Big Eight Conference Olympians is Rita Graves, an alternate on the track and field team.

Two K-State coaches have offered their views on the United State's medal chances.

VOLLEYBALL

The U.S. men's volleyball squad is favored to win the gold medal as it did in the 1984 Games at Los Angeles. The U.S. is also last year's World Cup and World Championships gold medalists. Expected to challenge the United States are Russia, France and Bulgaria.

The Americans are led by 1984's most valuable player Steve Timmons, and team captain Karch Kiraly, who was named the outstanding leyball player of the world last year by the International Volleyball Federation.

attacker," said K-State volleyball coach Scott Nelson, who played on the U.S. national team in the late '70s, between the 1976 and 1980 Olympic games. 'He can attack from the front or back row. It doesn't matter where he plays. He's one of the studs in the world."

Nelson said the Americans are, without a doubt, a safe bet to win the

"What has made them so good is that they have four or five of the most competitive individuals in the world who refuse to lose," he said.

The women's volleyball team has no players returning from the 1984 U.S. Olympic squad, which earned the silver medal. China - which won the gold in 1984 - is favored to win again, followed by the United States and the Russians.

The women are led by 6-foot-3 attacker Caren Kemner, who was voted to the six-player, all-world team last year. The captain is 33-year-old Laurel Kessel, a veteran of the 1976 Montreal Games, who was asked to come back and run the offense for this year's squad because of the team's lack of floor leadership.

"The women will have to play at their potential or above in order to advance to the medal round," Nelson said. "China will be tough to beat. I think the Cubans are the only team to beat them in three years, but (the Cubans) are boycotting this year's Olympics.'

BASEBALL

The U.S. men's baseball squad features two Big Eight players -University of Missouri shortstop Dave Silvestri and Oklahoma State University third baseman Robin

Ventura earned NCAA player-ofthe-year honors as a junior in 1987, leading the Cowboys to a secondplace finish in the College World

A two-time Big Eight player of the "Timmons is an outstanding year, Ventura hit .391 last year with 96 RBI and 26 home runs. He was also the 10th pick overall in this summer's Major League Baseball draft, but he has yet to sign with the Chicago White Sox.

SEOUL, South Korea - Mobbed like a movie queen and smiling for the cameras, Florence Griffith Joyner led the cast of U.S. track and field stars to the Olympics on Thursday, while leading man Carl Lewis went into hiding after a cocky vow of victory.

Grand Slam tennis champion Stef-Graf, not quite used to her sudden celebrity, recoiled in fear and shed a few tears when engulfed by a sea of shoving, stumbling reporters, photographers and television crews at the

"I've never had a reception like this anywhere before," Graf said breathlessly. "I'm very excited but it's a little frightening. I hope it's not going to be like this all the time."

It won't be for everyone, but the superstars at the Games might as well get used to the crush.

Hurdler Edwin Moses, too fast to let age catch up with him, flew in from Japan with Griffith Joyner, more than 90 teammates and U.S. wrestlers, kayakers and synchronized swimmers.

World-record triple jumper Willie Banks, sprinter Calvin Smith and miler Steve Scott, named captains of the men's track team earlier in the day, also arrived, along with the women's captains, sprinter Evelyn Ashford and high jumper Louise

None of them, however, had the glamour of Griffith Joyner, in her unique brand of high fashion as always. None drew as much attention as the lady who is favored to win at South Korea. K-State Athletic Director Steve Miller will also be in Seoul attending the games as they begin Saturday.

100 and 200 meters. On the arm of her husband, Al Joyner, she breezed to the bus silently.

Lewis made his grand entrance a day earlier, garbed in a white silk suit and boldly vowing to reclaim the title of fastest man alive. Lewis is seeking to match the four golds he won in 1984 in the 100, 200, 400 relay and

"The gold medal for the 100-meter race is mine," Lewis declared, dismissing rival Ben Johnson of Canada, who holds the world record at 9.83 seconds and has beaten Lewis in six of their last eight races outdoors.

I will never again lose to Johnson. Lewis said he wouldn't allow further interviews before his events and huffed that he would go home if reporters bothered him. Unlike most of the other 12,000 athletes and officials already in Seoul, Lewis has two houses he can stay in outside the Olympic Village. He also is the only athlete with his own glossy guide listing his achievements. Political issues still were nudging sports for top billing with the start of the Games two days away. The Libyan team mysteriously was absent; an obscure Korean group issued a death threat against the Japanese team that led to even tighter security; and student protests grew more violent. At least 33 officers and 15 students were reported injured, some seriously, in clashes at a university south of Seoul when riot police broke up an anti-government rally by 600 dissidents.

Jones poses big threat for 'Cats

By Chris Wilhelm Sports Writer

K-State might have a hard time battling the Tulane Green Wave Saturday, but with a little luck the Wildcats won't have to worry about the storm and fury of Hurricane Gilbert within the comfortable confines of the Louisiana Superdome.

K-State's biggest threat this weekend is in the form of Tulane quarterback Terrence Jones, The Sporting News' pick for top combination quarterback in the country and a highly touted Heisman Trophy candidate.

"Terrence Jones, their quarterback, is outstanding," K-State coach Stan Parrish said. "He's been outstanding for three years and he led them to a bowl game last year.

"He has not played particularly well in his first two games this year, which scares me. The kid is dynamite. He runs the option, he throws well, he does everything.'

Jones' attributes were also praised by the coach of the team that beat the Green Wave last week, 30-13. Iowa State coach Jim Walden said Jones will pressure K-State.

K-State Wildcats vs. Tulane Green Wave

Game Time: 7 p.m. Saturday.

Place: Louisiana Superdome (74,966).

TV: None. Radio: The 34-station Wildcat Radio Network (KMAN

Season Records: K-State 0-2; Tulane 1-1.

Series Record: This is the first meeting between the schools.

Notes: For the first time in its 93-year football history, K-State will play indoors ... the 'Cats haven't played in Louislana since 1982 when they lost to Wisconsin in the Independence Bowl at Shreve-port ... K-State's last road victory was in 1985 at Missouri ... Place-kicker Mark Porter is yet to miss a kick of any kind this season. He is one-for-one in extra points, and two-for-two in field goals.

"(The Wildcats) are going to see a quarterback who could put a lot of pressure on them. He has the ability to put a lot of points on the board. I don't know if there is a better quarterback in the country," Walden said.

While the Wildcats could have their hands full with Jones, Parrish said he intends to run pretty much the same game plan as he did against the University of Iowa.

"We're going to do what we do best. We are going to try to dictate the terms of the game and not let them dictate to us. We are going to throw the football and move it around and try to set up the run with our passing," Parrish said.

"We want to do the same thing we did to Iowa. We'll try to keep them off balance and keep them wondering what we'll do next," he added.

Although he had a somewhat shaky game last week, quarterback Carl Straw will once again direct the Wildcats' offense.

"(Straw) did some things very well offensively against Iowa," Parrish said. "We want to grow on the good things and eliminate the bad things, and I think experience will do that for him."

Another key obstacle facing the 'Cats is the Green Wave's success at home. Tulane finished its 1987 campaign with a 6-5 record, with five of its six wins in the Superdome.

"They can be an explosive team. We are going to try to keep them off balance by mixing up what we do both offensively and defensively," Parrish said. "If we keep our mistakes to a minimum, we'll have an excellent chance to win."

After struggling past the University of Tennessee-Chattanooga at home in its first game, and losing to Iowa State on the road, Green Wave coach Greg Davis said his squad is looking o gain a measure of respectability against K-State. "K-State is a better team than it has been in the past," Davis said. "(The Wildcats) do things defensively that tend to create inconsistencies for offenses. Offensively, they run out of multiple sets, and they throw the ball

There's no place like dome for Parrish

By Chris Wilhelm Sports Writer

There's no place like dome. That's what the K-State football team is hoping as it prepares for its trip to New Orleans to play the Tulane Green Wave Saturday in the Superdome.

This game will mark the first time in K-State's 93-year football history that the Wildcats have played in an indoor stadium.

"I've only coached a couple of games in a dome," coach Stan Parrish said. "We opened up in the Metrodome against Minnesota when I coached at Purdue. Our kids really enjoyed it. It's nice when you can

"The lighting in there is pretty good."

-Stan Parrish, football coach control the elements."

The Wildcats might experience a small problem with the level of noise inside the dome as Tulane's home attendance average last year almost reached the 40,000 mark. Coming off a bowl appearance last year, and a season-opening 35-10 loss to Iowa State last week, the possibility of a large crowd for the Green Waves home opener remains, Parrish said. The Superdome, which can seat 74,966 fans, is also home to the New Orleans Saints of the National Football League.

Parrish said the field might pose other problems the 'Cats have not seen this season.

'The field doesn't have a big crown on it. It's relatively flat," Parrish said. "It also has two sets of hashmarks on the field. One set is for college teams and the other is for the pros. We have to make sure we don't get lined up wrong. That's why we are going to practice in (the Superdome) on Friday, so we don't get mixed up.

"(The Superdome also has) a big replay scoreboard. Players sometimes have a tendency to stand around and watch the last play on the screen. We just have to forget about that stuff and focus on what our job is in the end," he said.

Other than the hashmarks and the scoreboard, Parrish said Saturday's game will be "just like playing outside."

"Except that the weather will be predictable — 70 degrees and there's not going to be any wind," he said. "The lighting in there is pretty good, so I don't see it being a problem as far as our receivers are concerned.

Parrish is 2-0 in games he has coached in a domed stadium.

Reagan's removal suggested; White House denies report

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - President Reagan said Thursday there is "no truth" to a suggestion that he was inattentive to his duties during the Iran-Contra crisis, and the White House denied any serious thought was given to removing him from office by constitutional means.

"It's total nonsense," said White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater. "It speaks more to the state of mind of some of the staff here than it does about the president."

Fitzwater was referring to White House aides who were interviewed by James Cannon, a longtime associate of Howard H. Baker Jr., on the weekend in 1987 when Baker replaced Donald T. Regan as White House chief of staff.

In a new book by two newspaper reporters, Cannon is quoted as saying that after interviewing 15 to 20 White House aides, he wrote a memo to Baker that began: "Consider the possibility that section four of the 25th Amendment might be applied."

The 25th Amendment, added to the Constitution in 1967, provides the president may be removed if the vice president and a majority of the cabinet declare him "unable to discharge the powers and duties of his office."

building, was asked what he thought of Cannon's story. When he appeared not to understand the question, another reporter shouted, "25th Amendment."

"There's no truth to any of this," the president responded.

Cannon, in an interview with Cable News Network, said that of the staffers he talked to "not all but most said in one way or another that the president was inattentive, that he had lost interest in his job."

He later said on the CBS Evening News, "My concern then and today is that they were more loyal to Don Regan than they were to Ronald Reagan."

Regan, asked in Portland, Maine, about the book's assertion that the president was out of touch, said: "Well, I'm a little doubtful of that. Of course the White House was in somewhat of disorder. He was down because he had had an operation in early January, but I think by that time he had fully recovered from it.'

"There's nothing to this," said Fitzwater. "This is fiction by staff people who for their own reasons chose to say this. It was dismissed immediately by those who heard it. It was never taken seriously."

Cannon also said he concluded

Reagan, returning to the White after seeing Reagan that there was House after speaking in a nearby no reason to invoke the amendment and said he assumed the aides were motivated by loyalty to Regan, who had been removed by the president and replaced with Baker.

Cannon and Fitzwater differed, however, over how long the matter was under consideration.

According to Cannon, he interviewed the White House staffers on Friday, Feb. 27, 1987, and the following day and wrote his memo on Sunday. Then on Monday, he said, Baker and he and others had a working lunch with the president.

"To our obvious delight, President Reagan was dandy," he said. "I thought, 'This man is fine and what are these guys talking about?""

Fitzwater, however, said Cannon "raised the question and Senator Baker said, 'That's not the president I talked to,' and that was the end of it."

The spokesman said this was the account given him by Baker and by A.B. Culvahouse, another former Baker aide who took part in the transition from Regan to Baker.

Efforts to reach Baker, now practicing law in Huntsville. Tenn., and Culvahouse, now White House counsel, by telephone were

Tax rule may affect builder

By The Associated Press

WICHITA - The Kansas Racing Commission licensed Sunflower Racing to build and operate a horse and greyhound track in Kansas City even though another company run by Sunflower's president owes $172,179 in delinquent Sunflower President Dick Boushka is a partner of Brittany Developments Corp., which owes the taxes to Sedgwick County, The Wichita Eagle-Beacon reported in its editions Friday.

The Kansas Pari-Mutuel Racing Act forbids licensing of a company if the company or any of its officers has failed to meet tax obligations. It was not clear Thursday whether the pari-mutuel law would apply in

The newspaper said state records showed that as well as being a partner in Brittany, Boushka is also a partner of Gallic Corp., which is itself a partner in Brittany.

Boushka acknowledged the Brittany taxes are delinquent, but said they would be paid by the end of this month, as part of a restructuring of Brittany. He added that the situation "does not involve me personally. I don't own 100 percent of Brittany Development."

Records indicate Bouska owns about a third of Brittany and is majority stockholder and president of Gallic.

The racing commission chairman, Alfred Schroeder, and the commission attorney would not venture an opinion on whether the situation violates the law, but they said the commission should look into it.

"The core of the issue" is whether there is a relationship between Boushka's companies that would make the pari-mutuel law applicable, said Janet Chubb, the commission attorney.

"I think that this is certainly something the commission would be interested in knowing," she said.

The Kansas Bureau of Investigation, responsible for checking the financial backgrounds of all track applicants, probably completed its investigation of Sunflower Racing a short time before the Brittany Developments taxes would have been due on June 20,

To offset retirement and fringe benefit shortfalls and expected future shortfalls, the regents approved a supplemental appropriation of $353,827 for K-State Cooperative Extension Service.

Quayle's speech was interrupted when supporters from the Libertarian party started shouting, "Debate Ron Paul," its candidate.

When the shouting began, Quayle stopped speaking until his supporters quieted the Libertarians by chanting "Bush, Bush."

The Libertarian Party supports less government intervention in private businesses, and more citizens' rights, said Karl Peterjohn, a Libertarian supporter. But, it has a difficult time gaining support because it lacks money for campaigning.

K-State coach Mike Clark said he also likes second baseman Ty Griffin from Georgia Tech University.

"Ventura is excellent, and of course Silvestri is very good, but I really like Griffin. He can do a lot of things," Clark said. "But if Cuba is going to be there, I don't think our chances at a gold medal are very good. Cuba would be the A-No.1 team if it is there."

The U.S. squad will not have to worry about the Cubans because Cuba has opted to boycott the Games. With Cuba out of the picture, the top teams now look to be the United States, Japan, Taiwan and the host team - Korea.

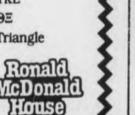

"With Cuba not in it, then I think we have a shot at (the gold medal)," Clark said. "But Korea will be tough with 50,000 people screaming for them over there."

Making the trip to Seoul as an assistant coach is Dave Bingham, head baseball coach at the University of Kansas. Bingham was also an assistant at the 1984 Games.

Faculty studying biological defense

By Scott Miller Special Projects Editor

Editor's note: This is the first part of a two-part series examining research at K-State for the U.S. Army's Biological Defense Program.

K-State is one of about 100 universities in the United States doing research as part of the Biological Defense Program, the U.S. Army's program to devise a defense against biological weapons.

Although Professor of Biology John Iandolo's research grant is funded as part of the Biological Defense Program, Iandolo said he is not working on biological weapons.

Iandolo said his research, which is funded by the National Institutes of Health and the U.S. Army Institute of Infectious Diseases, involves the "mode of action of bacterialogical toxins for potential use as vaccines."

landolo's grant is titled "Cloning Sequencing and Structural Manipulation of the Enterotoxin D and E Genes from Staphylococcus aureus."

Iandolo said that although some items in his research had been components of biological weapons in the past, he does not think the Army is using his research to produce biolog-

"I'm no advocate of the Defense department. None of us (scientists) are. There's plenty of reasons in the past to think that these guys aren't telling the truth. In this particular case, I happen to believe them," he Iandolo said biological war was "unthinkable" and that even the prospect of it should prevent both the military from using biological weapons and scientists from doing research on biological weapons.

"I don't know of any scientist involved in making clandestine weapons," he said. "I don't think anybody would take money if it were related to biological warfare. I've never been approached and neither has anyone I know."

Iandolo said that other than a yearly report to the U.S. Army, which he characterized as "superficial," the results of his research are published in scholarly journals. He said he would refuse to cooperate if any limits were placed on sharing his results with the scientific community.

"That's where I draw the moral line. I don't provide them any information that is classified, and frankly, my research doesn't have implications for biological warfare," he said. Although University officials say Iandolo's research is of a "defensive" nature, it appears the University has

Dole addresses difficult issues in speech to Manhattan crowd

By Jenny Reschke Collegian Reporter

Speaking to about 150 people Saturday at the Manhattan Community Center, Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan., warned that presidential candidates need to address the "difficult issues," such as the federal deficit.

In an endorsement appearance for State Senate Republican candidate Lana Oleen, Dole predicted a tough presidential election.

"I believe that George Bush will win. Michael Dukakis has a lot of explaining to do to the American people. We need to know more about him and what he stands for," he said.

Dole also emphasized the need for Congress to resolve the appropriations bills before them and then go home as soon as possible.

"The sooner Congress adjourns, the better off the taxpayers will be. We might as well go home and let the voters have a little rest and let them focus on the presidential race," he said.

Speaking to reporters, Dole defended the pending multi-year Soviet grain deal. The current fiveyear agreement, which Dole helped negotiate, expires Sept. 30.

"There are some consumer groups who want us to stop exporting now because of the drought, and we don't believe that would be a very good idea because you would lose markets. And when you lose markets, you never get them back - or at least it takes a long time," he said.

"We're not in that big of a difficulty. We'd like to see an extension of the long-term grain agreement," Dole said.

Negotiations of the new pact could be wrapped up by Oct. 15, he

In other comments, Dole explained the Riley County highway funding situation.

"There's always money for Kansas. In fact, we've been working on a bridge in Riley County, but there's got to be some work done at the state level," he said. 'To qualify for discretionary funds, you must have some of the preliminary work done, and we're not quite there yet."

Dole said the current American military exercises in Germany are

"They're very, very important. Let's face it, if we're going to have readiness, then we're going to work with NATO countries," he

Hostages may be released

By The Associated Press

BEIRUT, Lebanon - A group holding three American professors and an Indian said Sunday it will consider freeing the hostages if Washington declares support within a week for the Palestinian uprising in the Israeli-occupied lands.

The declaration, similiar to one released Thursday, came in a handwritten Arabic language statement from Islamic Jihad for the Liberation of Palestine. It was delivered to the Beirut office of a Western news agency and Beirut's independent An-Nahar newspaper.

The statement was accompanied by a photograph showing the four hostages, all bare-footed, playing cards with soft drinks on the table.

The hostages are Alann Steen, 49, a journalism instructor; Jesse Turner, 41, a visiting professor of mathmatics and computer science; Robert Polhill, 55, a lecturer in accounting; and Mithileshwar Singh, 60, a visiting professor of finance and a legal the men in a statement released Thursday. The latest statement, like the previous one, said the hostages would be freed if the United States declares support for the Palestinian uprising that began Dec. 8.

The group is believed to be made up of Shiite Moslem zealots loyal to Iran and sympathetic to the Palestine Liberation Organization.

"This initiative still stands and we are waiting for responses in light of which we shall take the next steps required by the interests of the blessed uprising," the statement said.

"Our inclination to free the hostages is not an invitation for negotiations, but it comes within our conviction of human and ethical values," it added.

That remark appeared to be a reply to the U.S. State Department's assertion, in response to Thursday's statement, that it was unwilling to negotiate with the kidnappers.

The offer by the kidnappers has softening their demands.

They had earlier demanded the release of 400 Arab prisoners held by Israel and its militia allies in south Lebanon. Israel refused to free

The four educators were kidnapped Jan. 24, 1987 from the campus of the U.S.-affiliated Beirut University College, where they worked, by gunmen posing as policemen.

They are among 17 foreigners missing and believed kidnapped in Lebanon since March 1985.The others are five Americans, three Britons, an Irishman, an Italian and two unidentified men.

The longest held is American Terry Anderson, chief Middle East correspondent of The Associated Press. He was kidnapped in Beirut on March 16, 1985.

Washburn addition 'premature, official

Money might come from MOE

By Susan L'Ecuyer Senior Staff Writer

The addition of Washburn University to the Kansas Board of Regents system would be "premature" and would negatively affect the quality of the regents systems, Mike Johnston and Rod Olsen said Friday.

Addressing an audience of about 40 people, Johnston, Kansas Senate Minority Leader, and Olsen, 22nd District Democratic candidate for State Senate, voiced support for the second year of the Margin of Excellence. They also opposed the affiliation of Washburn University in Topeka to the regents system.

Olsen said K-State can be proud of turning around its enrollment numbers and of attracting high-quality students, as indicated by the number of National Merit Scholars and salutatorians and valedictorians attending K-State this year.

(But) there is an impending situation that needs to be addressed by Kansas State University and the institutions in the regents system," he said. "The increasing number of students creates a financial burden on K-State."

Olsen said the Board of Regents could not afford to support another institution at the current level of

"It's illogical from a policy standpoint," Olsen said.

He estimates the financial repercussion of adding Washburn to the regents system would be $8-10 million, which he said might come from the MOE.

Olsen sees it as a taxpayer issue as well, where it costs taxpayers more money for higher education and yet the quality of the institutions decreases.

Johnston, who pledged his commitment and support to the MOE, described it as "very important to the viability of not only Kansas State University but of the system as a whole itself."

Regarding the MOE, which is designed to bring faculty salaries up to 95 percent of average salaries at peer institutions, Johnston said the Kansas Legislature had pledged $16 million over the regular budget for the regents. K-State, he said, would get 25 percent of that.

'What that says to me is that Kansas State University was further behind in faculty salaries (than other institutions in the regents system)," Johnston said. "The idea of the Margin of Excellence is really to come up to the average of peer institutions, ... " Olsen said. "The idea of including Washburn in the regents system is premature. We must solve the problem of financing education first."

Washburn is a municipal institution financed by a city property tax of 17 mills, a student tuition higher than that of state institutions, as well as $4 million from the state.

Initially, Washburn rejected state affiliation, Johnston said, but now that it foresees financial problems in 10 years, it is looking for state help.

Johnston said Gov. Mike Hayden has made a commitment to Washburn to help affiliate it with the state system, and the question has gone from one of policy to one of politics.

"I don't necessarily share the notion that it become part of the state system. I do think the state will have to make some concession (financially)," Johnston said.

Johnston said if Washburn is made part of the regents system, it would be treated as a regents school and would not be supported by Topeka. Also, the one mill state tax levy for the Educational Building Fund, worth about $13 million, will have to

"What that says to me is that Kansas State University was further behind in faculty salaries."

—Mike Johnston minority leader be split among seven institutions rather than six, he said.

"If we're going to treat Washburn like a regents school, there's only one place that money can come from, and that's the state," he said. Johnston said Havden had recommended last year the supervision of Washburn be transferred to the regents and Washburn receive a single grant rather than financing based on credit-hours. The next step, he said, would have been full inclusion as a regents institution.

Hayden's recommendation passed the Senate, but not the House, he Although it is a possibility, Johnston said it is unlikely that Hayden will veto the second year's funding for the MOE if Washburn is not added to the state system. "We wouldn't want people in Manhattan to think he's holding Manhattan hostage in order to get Washburn into the regents system. 1990 is not that far away for him to build a record like that," Johnston said.

A possible reason Hayden vetoed the proposed property tax relief bill may be to create the impression that the state has enough money to afford adding Washburn to the regents system, Olsen said.

"There is not compelling reason as a policy to add another institution to the state system," Johnston said.

"I know of no issue that is more critical to the (22nd) district this year," Olsen said.

Man declares himself president

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti - Brig. Gen. Prosper Avril, a former military adviser for the Duvalier dictatorship, declared himself president on Sunday after ousting Lt. Gen. Henri Namphy.

Avril, adjutant general of the army, said in an early morning address on national television that the Presidential Guard toppled Namphy on Saturday because it was "sickened" by the way Namphy governed. Namphy was sent to the neighboring Dominican Republic.

Residents reported hearing heavy gunfire Saturday night near the presidential palace in what appeared to be fighting between military factions.

Frantz Lubin, Haiti's director of information, said soldiers were killed, but Avril mentioned no casualties.

Haiti radio stations reported that at least six people were killed in the capital in coup-related clashes, and that mobs pillaged two homes owned by Namphy and the home of Port-au-Prince Mayor Franck Romain,

The military government appealed in a national television broadcast "for calm, discipline and order in respect of individual rights and liberties."

Burmese president ousted

RANGOON, Burma - Armed forces commander Saw Maung ousted the civilian president on Sunday, and thousands of people surged into the streets to demand democracy and protest the fourth change in the government in two months.

Gen. Saw Maung said in a statement broadcast by state Radio Rangoon that he overthrew President Maung Maung to halt economic and social chaos and to hold democratic elections after 26 years of authoritarian rule.

The fate of Maung Maung was not known. There were no reports of casualties or arrests but sporadic shooting was reported in the capital.

Saw Maung, 59, immediately abolished key government institutions and slapped an 8 p.m. to 4 a.m. curfew on the capital, the country's largest city with 2.5 million residents. Public gatherings were banned, but it was not known whether the measures were only for Rangoon or for all of Burma.

Shortly after the 4 p.m. broadcast, thousands poured out of their homes, some bearing spears, knives and homemade crossbows, to protest the new regime. Protesters chopped down trees and threw them along with stones and bricks across roads to block military vehicles.

"I believe the people will rise up again and this time they are going to be angrier. It's going to be tragic," Burma expert Josef Silverstein of Rutgers University said by telephone.

Woman decapitates husband

NAIROBI, Kenya - A woman decapitated her husband with an axe in a village north of Nairobi after he refused to eat the meal she had prepared and fed it his dog, the Sunday Nation newspaper reported.

The independent newspaper said the man was killed Wednesday in Kinyaga, 100 miles north of Kenya's capital.

Police confirmed the incident but refused to identify the 35-year-old woman or her 38-year-old husband.

Search for bodies continues

MONTERREY, Mexico - Workers searched on Sunday for the bodies of up to 200 people swept away when a river poured over its banks and overturned four buses. Ninety people were confirmed dead.

The buses were caught in the path of the Santa Catarina River when a flash flood spawned by Hurricane Gilbert ripped a 40-mile-long path of destruction Saturday through northern Mexico's most populated region.

It was the epilogue to a week of death and havoc caused by Gilbert, which ravaged the Yucatan Peninsula resort areas of Cancun, Cozumel and Isla Mujeres before crossing the Gulf of Mexico and hitting Mexico again in the northeast near Texas.

The storm killed at least 98 people while coursing the Caribbean, including 29 in the Yucatan when it hit land last Wednesday with winds of up to 200 mph, 26 in Jamaica, 30 in Haiti, five in the Dominican Republic and eight in Honduras. Two people were killed Saturday in Texas by tornados spawned by the storm.

BRIEFLY ACROSS NATION

Fires revive aging forests

CASCADE, Idaho - While many lament the fires that have charred much of Yellowstone National Park, a wilderness that went up in smoke just one year ago already displays lush and diverse greenery that attracts herds of elk.

"The fire created more wildlife habitat than anything we could have ever done," Forest Ranger Morris Huffman said of the Deadwood Summit fire in the Frank Church-River of No Return Wilderness in the Boise National Forest.

The fire 250 miles west of Yellowstone burned more than 50,000 acres during the summer of 1987.

"It's a natural mosaic now, with open meadows and stands of timber," said forest spokesman Frank Carroll. "A forest that was just getting older and deader has now been beautifully Federal land managers, rocked by criticism of their hands-off approach to dealing with naturally sparked wildfires in wilderness areas and parks, point to Deadwood Summit as an example of a good burn. It's a tough sell.

Fires this summer have charred more than 1.5 million acres in and around Yellowstone.

BRIEFLY THE REGION

Man dies after fall from truck

TOPEKA — A work-release inmate from the Community Residential Center in Topeka died of injuries suffered when he fell out of the back of a truck traveling along the shoulder of Interstate 70, the Highway Patrol said.

Rickie Frydendall, 28, originally from Gardner, received head injuries Friday evening when he apparently was swept out of the truck by a gust of wind from a passing tractor-trailer rig.

The patrol said Frydendall was part of a crew working on a highway resurfacing project near Topeka. He died at a Topeka hospital Saturday afternoon.

Fair to aid career decisions

By Guy Peverley Collegian Reporter

Choosing a career is a decision that doesn't come easy, but help is on the way.

The ninth annual Agribusiness Careers Fair is scheduled from 8:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. Tuesday in the Union Ballroom.

The fair is a chance for students to "interview the interviewer," said John Riley, assistant director of resident instruction. Thirty-nine businesses and agencies are expected to attend the fair, meet with students and show them the opportunities that are available.

Students will be able to learn about internship possibilities and get vital career information from potential employers. Business and agency representatives make contact with students as prospective employees and make their organizations better known on campus, Riley said.

"It is important that we have a high degree of students and faculty participation if the careers fair is to be successful and worthwhile for the employers," he said.

K-State to submit application to EPA for substance center

By The Collegian Staff

K-State has been ranked first in technical merit for the Environmental Protection Agency Region 7 and 8 Hazardous Substance Research Center, Sen. Bob Dole announced Saturday in Manhattan.

"The number one ranking in technical merit means that the EPA will ask the University to submit a formal application and then (the EPA will) ant economic impact on the area and will bolster research efforts at the University," Dole said.

"We need more research at K-State. That's what's going to make the University stronger," he said. "We're very anxious to have this completed.

"(University officials) don't know precisely how much money they'll receive, but somebody thinks it will fund the center. It will have signific- be in the neighborhood of $1 million, so we're very happy to be helping on that," he said.

> The consortium of universities in EPA Region 7 and 8 which submitted the initial proposal included K-State, Montana State University, the University of Missouri, the University of Nebraska, the University of Iowa, the University of Montana and the University of Utah.

Coliseum gala ignores student participation

On the evening of Sept. 30, students will finally get a chance to take an up-close gander at the house that Fred built. It's the evening of the Fred Bramlage Coliseum Gala - a grand opening celebration promising to be the social event of the season.

For the price of a $35 ticket you can choose from not one or two, but four, yes four, international theme areas featuring Italian, Oriental, Polynesian and Kansas City-style foods. As an added bonus, you can sample the French dessert table.

In addition, you can dance to the music of Matt Betton and the Palace Jazz Band. All this, and a world of priceless hobnobbing, for only $35.

But wait a minute. Haven't students already paid an enormous amount of money for Bramlage? How many students, especially those that have been here a few years, already have paid more than $35 for Bramlage?

Sure, $25 of the ticket price will be used to enhance scholarships at K-State, but one has to wonder how much student money could have enhanced scholarships if Bramlage had not cost more than was originally planned or had never been constructed.

But rather than gripe about what could have been, the student body should look to the future - more specifically, to Sept. 30.

Wouldn't it be great if students, in light of their support for Bramlage above and beyond the call of duty, could get discount or free passes to what looks to be the K-State barn-burner of all time?

Or perhaps on Sept. 30, students should simply show up at the festivities, and when asked for money simply show the person in the ticket booth a fee card.

It is not a secret that students shelled out about $7 million for the building, as much money as Bramlage paid. Do you think they'll charge him admission?

But whatever you do don't forget, attire is formal black tie optional.

Handgun bill inadequate Congress overlooks crimes of passion

he House of Representatives has been around drugs too long. It would appear that the anti-drug bill the House is working on is having an adverse affect on their reasoning abilities. Not only have they endangered the Constitution to wage the War on Drugs, now they are physically endangering the lives of law-abiding citizens.

Last Thursday, exactly one week after passing an amendment to the drug bill that weakened search and seizure laws and allowed the death penalty for drug-related murders, the House voted to delete an amendment which would have established a sevenday waiting period and mandatory background check for any person attempting to purchase a handgun.

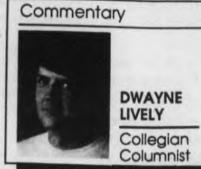

Interestingly, the vote was not divided along the ideological lines that similar votes have been in the past. Liberals and conservatives in both parties were split over the amendment. In fact, the only group that wasn't divided over the amendment was the National Rifle Association. Their lobbying swayed many of the members of the House to vote against the handgun amendment.

Since we are in an election year, it is likely that the NRA is simply flexing its political muscles. The organization does claim to have over 3 million members. That's a lot of muscles, but, it's not a lot of brains.

The NRA, which is adamantly opposed to gun registration of any sort, is apparently also opposed to waiting for a gun. Instead of a waiting period which would give police officers a chance to do thorough background checks on gun buyers, the NRA supports a new drug bill amendment which would establish mandatory jail sentences for any felon found in possession of a handgun.

The amendment, called the McCollum amendment, would also give the Department of Justice 180 days to develop a computer system that could do instant background checks on handgun buyers. The system they have in mind is similar to the instant credit card checks some companies run when customers purchase items with credit cards.

Unfortunately, neither Rep. Bill McCollum, R-Fla., who drew up the new amendment, nor the NRA have explained how the system will be paid for or how they will get a "Felon-Rating Checker" into every pawn shop and gun dealership in the country. If they don't get a checker in every shop, they haven't accomplished much with the new

They also haven't explained how gun dealers are supposed to react when they discover that the person on the other side of the counter is a convicted felon. (Please note that the Felon-Rating Checker doesn't do anything to stop people from becoming felons. It only works after they've been convicted and are out on parole.)

The NRA, with its "a gun on every hip; a bullet in every felon" mentality, probably hopes to see a lot of felons gunned down. Quite a few will be, as will quite a few people with the same names as convicted felons and more than a few gun dealers with delusions of being Rambo.

ne reason the NRA supports the amendment is because they see it as a way to keep felons from owning guns without infringing on the rights of "honest, law-abiding citizens" to own as many rifles and handguns as they need in order to feel "safe." Unfortunately, most murders, according to FBI statistics, occur during, or soon after, family squabbles. Most of the recent mass murders have been by people who had no previous criminal record and used guns they already owned. The McCullom amendment would not apply to them, since they already own guns.

It is given that the seven-day waiting period could not stop people who already own guns from killing if they wanted, but it could prevent spur-of-the-moment killing. In the heat of a moment, it is easier for people to kill; they don't think about what they are doing, they just do it.

If they have a few days and a chance to cool off and think about the consequences of their actions, however, they are less likely to carry out the murder.

Without the spur-of-the-moment killings to worry about, police could concentrate on capturing serial killers, even burglars and other criminals. It is also given that some people still would be mad enough or crazy enough to wait seven days to kill someone, but with fewer cases to investigate, the police would have more resources to commit to finding and arresting the people who do murder. The result would be a decrease in murders and an increase in murder convictions. he police would have a chance to do their job and run thorough background checks not because the government stepped in and registered all the handguns in the United States nor even because the government stepped in and took the handguns away from the "average, lawabiding citizen," but because the government made citizens wait a few days to get their hands on a gun. This is what the NRA must be against when it opposes the seven-day waiting period; a country where citizens are safe and police can do their job more effectively and

The Fraternal Order of Police is, incidentally, in favor of the seven-day waiting period. The NRA evidentally knows better than the police when it comes to protecting citizens and convicting felons.

Instead of a solution to the handgun problem that uses resources already available, they favor the installation of a computer system that, in order to have any affect on the murder rate, would have to be installed in every store that sells guns legally in the United States, could do nothing about illegal gun sales and would cost tax-payers millions. All this to keep a few members from waiting.

It seems that the 3 million members of the NRA lack, or overlook, one major fact of life: the only person who needs a gun "right away, this very minute," is a person who is planning on using it.

Honor our Olympians

It's been a long time since I've seen a parade to honor anyone. Many times parades honor war heroes. I say it's time to plan to honor two peace heroes: Manhattan's own Anna Seaton and K-State's Mitch Richmond who are competing at the Seoul Olympics.

I'd like to see a parade, a convocation at dear old K-State and one at Manhattan High School and whatever else would be appropriate. I believe Grantland Rice, the famous sportswriter, said, "It's not whether you win or lose but how you play the game." I know both will do a heroic job at the Olympics.

How about it, K-State, Manhattan High, the Chamber of Commerce, service clubs, the City of Manhattan, and, yes, the State of Kansas and Gov. Mike Hayden's office? Let's make plans to have some fun and honor some great athletes.

Real tired of Elvis

Editor,

I have finally had it.

Referring to the article "Elvis is Everywhere" in the Sept. 8 editorial section, I am completely fed up with all the cute, pseudointellectual articles on the latest rumors of Elvis. All you had to do, Catherine Doud, is bear with it a couple of months longer, and the media and news would have been through with their rumors and so-called exclusive about him.

You did it yourself, though. You wrote another article on Elvis, which is exactly what you are tired of seeing. As for the bumper stickers and other Elvis paraphernalia - live with it. I hated "Child on Board" signs. I had to live with them. Why is being an Elvis fan becoming less "socially acceptable"? I realize that there are people who "live and breathe" Elvis, and other people who imitate him right down to the silver studs and gold chains. But, so what?

If they are happy, they are happy. Appropiately, the quote for this week in the K-State Programmer sums up this whole situation: "Criticism: What we say about other people who don't have the same faults we have." I also realize Elvis died from a drug overdose, which I hear of quite a bit from my friends. John Belushi died from a drug overdose, but I never hear any disrespectful words

The basic problem here, I would imagine, is the height of greatness he achieved during his lifetime.

Basically, the moral of the story is to make sure you do not achieve so much as to become a household name. For if you do, a nasty college journalist will get around to writing a similar column about you.

Oh, about Elvis being alive or not: why must anyone even worry about it? He lives in Michigan and is the landlord of my house. I know because I pay my rent.

Paul T. Brooks junior in elementary education

Replace camp out

So someone on the Athletic Ticket Sales Task Force finally got smart. Instead of having to camp out for a month, students can now do what they originally came to K-State for get an education.

I realize that camping out for basketball tickets has become a "tradition," but I believe it is one that reflects poorly on the KSU Athletic Department and the University. Why are we one of the few major colleges that have to resort to such tactics?

With all our knowledge and bright young minds available, why can't someone come up with a suitable alternative to camping out?

I'm positive that students have more important things to do besides crowding into over-packed tents, rain or shine, days in advance, just to be able to purchase "good"

Why should someone have to miss a class just because their replacement didn't show and they were afraid a roll call might be taken? What are we about: education or basketball tickets?

There are students that strongly support the current system because it is "fun" and "traditional." I'm glad they enjoy it, but when it comes time to camp out once more and students once again miss classes because they have trouble finding fill-ins, I wonder what it is exactly this University is focusing on.

Design department realizes growing pains

Enrollment cap possible

By Kevin Kramer Collegian Reporter

Plans are being drawn up and reviewed to limit enrollment of firstyear students in the College of Architecture and Design's Department of Environmental Design in the fall of 1989.

'We are in trouble because we lack space," said Mark Lapping, dean of the College of Architecture and Design. "Enrollment in our college is up 13.2 percent, approximately 360 students, over last year alone, and we foresee this trend to continue."

A reason for the jump in enrollment is due to the increased visibility of the college - both on the regional and national level, said Richard Hoag, head of the Department of Environmental Design.

This increase is mainly due to the efforts of Lapping and the faculty in recruiting and retaining students, Hoag said.

Lapping and Hoag said articles specifically on K-State's College of Architecture and Design in the Yale University "Insiders' Guide to Colleges" and the New York Times' "Best Buys in Colleges" have been positive indicators of the growing visibility of the college and its increased enrollment.

The increasing enrollment has caused the faculty to endorse the concept of an enrollment cap, Lapping said. They are also working with the administration on the feasibility of bringing the college's enrollment within national norms, he said.

Lapping said K-State's policy of open enrollment is placing a load on the college's resources and its ability to deliver and guarantee the quality of instruction students deserve.

The current number of faculty and staff in the college can accomodate about 800 students without hindering the credibility of the programs, said Robert Kruh, associate provost and dean of the graduate school.

This semester nearly 400 students are enrolled in the first-year architecture program, he said. Last year's similar increase in the number of first-year students has created a situation where the college will soon have more students than it can accomodate.

"This results in constraints on both the space and staff within the college," Kruh said.

"There are many options being considered in controlling the growth," he said.

One solution is to limit enrollment, which would prevent the students currently in the program from being shortchanged in the learning experience, Kruh said.

The increased number of students is resulting in shifting a large number of faculty to other courses, Lapping said. This in turn is forcing faculty to curtail the offering of specialized elective courses and the amount of time spent in research and study, he

"This makes the entire learning experience have less richness for both the faculty and students," Lapping said. "I understand the situation we're between a rock and a hard place."

The University is looking at a number of criteria in examining the feasibility of an enrollment cap, Lapping said.

The first consideration in controlling enrollment is to limit the number of students entering the first-year program, Kruh said. A screening process between the first- and second-year programs is also being discussed, he said. There are clearly some students who will make the screening process and others who are less qualified, Kruh said. Kruh said he is more in favor of limiting enrollment rather than screening students, especially after those students have vested one to two years in the program.

Enrollment increase causing crowded studios for students

By Kevin Kramer Collegian Reporter

The increased number of students in the College of Architecture and Design's department of Environmental Design has forced the college to put a limit on the amount of studio space available to each student this

"Our greatest concern, at this point, is the effects of the overcrowding upon the learning environment of the students currently in the program," said Mark Lapping, dean of the College of Architecture and Design.

The faculty and staff are concerned with the quality of teaching and instruction within the college, he said. Overcrowded classes could result in an erosion of the quality of work for which the college has become noted.

"A few more students will not erode the learning experience in a few of our courses, which rely upon the large lecture format of teaching," Lapping said. "The major teaching venue in our college is the studio experience."

Providing the proper teaching environment, which includes allowing space for enough tables and

"The (studio) classes are really crowded," said Maria Klingele, a freshman in environmental design. "We're squished together, with no room to get between the tables."

"The instructors are doing a good job in getting around to each student in class," she said. "But there is (still) a lack of personal attention due to the size of the class."

When class projects are critiqued, there is only enough time to pick up the good and bad points in a general review of the projects, she said.

Minor details are not covered in class, she said, adding that students have to make the extra effort to see the instructor after class time.

"Currently we are teaching classes in four different buildings - Seaton, Seaton Court, Willard, and Fairchild," Lapping said. "This has led to fragmentation of our school spirit, our solidarity, which has always been strong.'

Because the studios are located in four buildings, faculty other than the studio instructors are inhibited from wandering through to view projects and offer suggestions, Lapping said. In the past this concept of critiquing ■ See CAP, Page 12 | chairs, so the faculty can provide a by more than one faculty member quality studio experience, is vital, he was more easily achieved because of the proximity of studios.

As a result of the overcrowding, the college is being forced to address the need of more studio space for students, he said. The future holds the answers to a lot of the space problem, Lapping said. The completion of the Durland Phase III project will allow movement of more of the College of Engineering from Seaton to Durland

The current situation of overcrowding was solved by creating more studio space in Willard Hall, he

The Departments of Chemistry and Biochemistry have authorized about 4,000 square feet of space on the second and third floors of Willard Hall for use by the College of Architecture and Design as studios, said Dale Hawley, acting head of the Department of Chemistry.

fraternity was able to defend its title by winning Campus Crusade for Christ's fifth annual Ironman competition for the second straight year, Sigma Chi placed second and Sigma Nu finished a close third.

The Ironman consisted of eight events: swimming relay, manmakers, tug-of-war, basketball, running relay, bicycle sprint relay, circuits and obstacle course.

The field was comprised of seven-man teams representing 11 K-State fraternities and CCC. This was three more teams than last year, and according to Dave Dishman, spokesman for CCC, the best year altogether.

"I think that this was our best year and we had the most teams compete this year. I thought that the competition was great and I thought that all the teams were evenly matched," Dishman said. "All the teams showed great sportsmanship, which made it fun."

The swimming relay began the two-day event Friday afternoon in the Natatorium. Sigma Nu won the 600-yard swim relay. The Sigma Nus also claimed the six-mile

Even with increased competition, Alpha Tau Omega running relay and the bicycle sprint relay titles Saturday.

Tau Kappa Epsilon captured manmakers, which consisted of two team members sprinting, hopping and carrying a teammate 40 yards. The TKEs also claimed the obstacle course title - which consisted of a wall climb, tire run, cone course, high jump, hurdles and a 90-yard sprint - and shared the basketball title with Theta Xi.

The ATOs captured the tug-of-war and circuit titles on their way to collecting the Samson Trophy, awarded to the winning team. ATO member Brian Zwahlen, senior in engineering technology, broke his own record in the circuit event with a total of 81/2 laps. Each lap consisted of a 440-yard dash and a series of calisthenic drills.

"The competition was definitely better from last year. The meet was more intense and went right down to the wire," said Scott Goertzen, senior in business administration and a member of the ATO team. "We put the best athletes from our house on the team and looked for the best combination.

"We saw other teams had athletes back from last year so we knew it would be tough," he added. "We were the tries.

strongest running team, so we knew if we did well in those events, we had a good chance of winning." Ironman was started at K-State in 1983 as a way to expose CCC to the greek system.

"We sponsor the Ironman to be a resource to the greek system and to make our name known in the greek system," Dishman said.

"It (the Ironman) was started at Southwest Missouri State. I think we are the only campus that does it and I believe that SMS is going to start doing it again, but right now it's just a K-State thing."

The Ironman provided stiff, yet enjoyable, competition for the athletes.

"Overall, I thought it was very competitve but I also enjoyed it," said Mike Nicholson, junior in business and a member of the Beta Theta Pi team. "(CCC) ran it very well, it was well organized and nothing was ever behind schedule."

Late Tulane rally ends 'Cat hopes for first victory

By Chris Wilhelm Sports Writer

K-State's football team seemingly had its game won Saturday night against Tulane University in the Superdome in New Orleans.

But, to modify an old phrase, defeat was snatched from the jaws of

After trailing most of the second half, the Wildcats, 0-3, took a 16-13 lead over the Green Wave with 1:47 left in the game when Carl Straw hit Greg Washington with a 17-yard scoring toss.

But Tulane, 2-1, drove the ball 77 yards in just 1:33 and Heisman Trophy candidate Terrence Jones hit Mike Pierce in the endzone with a one-yard pass to give the Green Wave a 20-16 win.

"It's starting to sound like an old record, but you just have got to keep getting off the deck and not let it get to you, but (losing) sure gets old," said Mike Deal, K-State's offensive coordinator.

Tulane's final scoring drive was aided by three penalties - a facem-

Tulane coach Greg Davis said he hadn't been more proud of a team before the Green Wave's comefrom-behind win.

"When there was work to be done, when their backs were to the wall, when everyone in the dome had given up on us, (this team) sucked it up and won," Davis said.

K-State coach Stan Parrish said Tulane, a 21-point favorite, wasn't prepared for the battle it received.

"I don't think (Tulane) thought we were going to give them a game," Parrish said. "We could've taken command in the third quarter, but we didn't."

Tulane tight end Chuck Gorman confirmed Parrish's suspicion.

"We did just well enough to get by. We would've liked to have done better, but Kansas State did a good job," he said, K-State took a 6-3 halftime lead its first lead at intermission since 1986 against the University of Kansas - as Mark Porter nailed field goals of 44 and 39 yards. Porter's 33-yard field goal in the fourth quarter tied a K-State record. It was the third time in his career that Porter has kicked three field goals in a game.

Fullback Lee Pickett gained a career-high 113 yards on 16 carries. Pickett's best effort had been last year against the University of Nebraska when he gained 44 yards on nine carries.

On defense, converted linebacker Maurice Henry had 15 tackles.

Gretzky debuts as King

By The Associated Press

VICTORIA, British Columbia -After making his debut in a Los Angeles King uniform, Wayne Gretzky acknowledged he wasn't himself.

"It's just the first exhibition game and it doesn't mean a whole lot yet," Gretzky said after the Kings' 7-4 loss to the Vancouver Canucks Saturday

Gretzky had two assists in the game, but was on the ice for three Canuck goals, two at even strength and the other with the Kings on the power play. Later he faced more than a dozen American and Canadian reporters and said, "You'll see a different Wayne Gretzky in the regular season."

Gretzky didn't dress in the exhibition season opener for both clubs Friday night — a 3-3 overtime tie in Duncan, British Columbia.

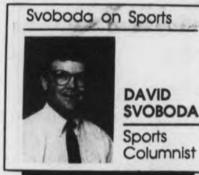

In his opening game with Los Angeles, Gretzky played on a line with converted centers Bobby Carpenter and Bernie Nicholls and drew huge cheers whenever he touched the puck. But he had a rather quiet game, showing little of the magic that has made him the game's greatest player.

Gretzky, Mike Krushelnyski and Marty McSorley were traded to the Kings by the Edmonton Oilers in a blockbuster off-season deal. In return, the Oilers got two players, three first-round draft choices and a reported $15 million.

Gretzky's appearance drew a standing-room-only crowd of 5,448 to Memorial Arena — the largest crowd to see a hockey game there since exhibition games in the mid-70s involving the Canucks and the Montreal Canadiens.

And in what had to be an NHL exhibition game first, scalpers outside the arena were getting as much as $40 for $20 tickets.

DeBerg over Denver

DAVID SVOBODA Sports

Remember what it was like to be a kid on Christmas morning? Remember the utter joy you experienced and the feeling that nothing in the world would prevent you from having fun on "your" day?

Steve DeBerg was that kid Sunday afternoon on a "Christmas in September" in Kansas City's Arrowhead Stadium, and the day, indeed, was DeBerg, named less than a week ago to replace Bill Kenney as the Kansas City Chiefs' starting quarterback, was behind center as the Chiefs knocked off the Denver Broncos, 20-13.

No Chief quarterback in recent looked so completely in command of the team's offense as DeBerg did Sunday. And, better yet, he was having one whale of a time while leading his team.

What made the win even sweeter for DeBerg is that it came at the expense of one of his former teams - the Broncos.

"I know those guys. They're friends of mine, and it's fun to beat your friends," DeBerg said after throwing two touchdown passes in leading the Chiefs to their first win in three games.

And it was obvious that DeBerg was having fun. Early in the second half, Kansas City started a drive deep in its own territory. DeBerg, as he did so well all day, hit a receiver out of the backfield with a pass, and the fun

The back who caught the ball was fullback Larry Moriarty, and as the 235-pound Moriarty turned upfield and lunged for the first down, he performed a not-so-impressive dance step that had his quarterback in himself.

"I thought I might have the game of my life. There was no question in my mind that we were going to win and I was going to perform well," said DeBerg, who hit 21 of 35 passes for 259 yards and easily outperformed Denver's highly-touted John Elway.

It was DeBerg's infectious enthusiasm that was the difference against the Broncos, the defending American Football Conference champions.

It's rare to see a Kansas City quarterback step into the huddle, shake his finger at his offense, and see that offense all but hypnotized by its quarterback's leadership ability.

It happened Sunday in Arrowhead, and it's going to happen a few more Sundays before 1988 is over.

In the second period against the Broncos, Denver lost veteran defensive back Jeremiah Castille, who was hospitalized for overnight observaCastille was being tended to, DeBerg turned to the Denver defenders.

"It was kind of funny, because I Believe it, and believe in DeBerg. know that defense so well," DeBerg He's having no trouble believing in said. "I went over there and said. 'Who's coming in for Castille? Is it you?' The guy must have been a rookie because he had the biggest eyes I've ever seen.'

DeBerg, having gained the information he needed, stepped into the huddle, called a slant route to wide receiver Carlos Carson, and seconds later lofted the ball into Carson's hands as Carson beat second-year defensive back Kevin Clark in the endzone for a six-yard score.

Clark, needless to say, was the guy with the big eyes.

DeBerg, needless to say, was the veteran who, having gained the information he needed to make a big play click, made it click just like he should have. That's the difference between being a winner and being a

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - Steve DeBerg threw two touchdown passes Sunday in his first start for Kansas City, leading the Chiefs to a 20-13 victory over Denver.

DeBerg, who played for Denver in 1981-83 until the Broncos acquired John Elway, flipped a six-yard scoring pass to Carlos Carson in the second quarter and engineered a 77-yard march with Kansas City's first possession of the second half.

Paul Palmer caught a 14-yard scoring pass behind Kevin Clark to cap the drive with his first touchdown reception as the Chiefs, 1-2, seized a 17-10 lead and handed the defending AFC champs their second loss in three games.

The Chiefs intercepted two of Elway's passes, giving them a against the Broncos' star. Tony Dorsett scored on an 8-yard run late in the second quarter for the Broncos' first touchdown.

Nick Lowery kicked a 50-yard field goal for the Chiefs in the first period and Rich Karlis answered for Denver with a 23-yarder. With 9:34 left in the game, Karlis added a 42-yarder. Lowery kicked a 29-yarder with 3:50 to play.

Denver defensive back Jeremiah Castille was carried away in the first half and taken to a hospital for overnight observation of neck and back injuries, a Denver spokesman said.

Lowery's 50-yarder was set up by another Denver turnover. Dino Hackett recovered a fumble by Orson Mobley after a 14-yard pass reception and gave the Chiefs the ball on the Bronco 34. After a 2-yard gain and two incomplete passes, Lowery league-high 18 career interceptions kicked the Chiefs into the lead.

Louganis setting out for gold medal sweep

By The Associated Press

SEOUL, South Korea - It's Greg Louganis all over again.

Four years ago, Louganis swept both Olympic diving gold medals, something only two other divers in Olympic history had accomplished.

He sets out for an unprecedented second sweep of Olympic golds on Day 4 — Tuesday in Seoul, Monday in the United States - in the finals of the men's 3-meter springboard, an event he won by more than 94 points in 1984.

The American diver will share the Olympic stage with the U.S. basketball team, which resumes its goldmedal march against Canada after opening the competition with a 97-53 victory over Spain, and with American boxer Kenny Gould.

The only other finals set for Day 4 are in the men's air rifle and in the 56-kilogram class of weightlifting.

Louganis, a winner of 47 national, six Pan American and five world championships, has set himself a goal in the springboard competition.

"Eight hundred points on the springboard is one goal of me," Louganis said before the Games. "It's never been done, so if I don't get it I won't lose my self-esteem."

His career best in the springboard is 755.49 points.

Mark Bradshaw, another American, and China's Tan Liangde and Li Deliang are most likely to challenge Louganis. Liangde was the silver medalist in 1984.

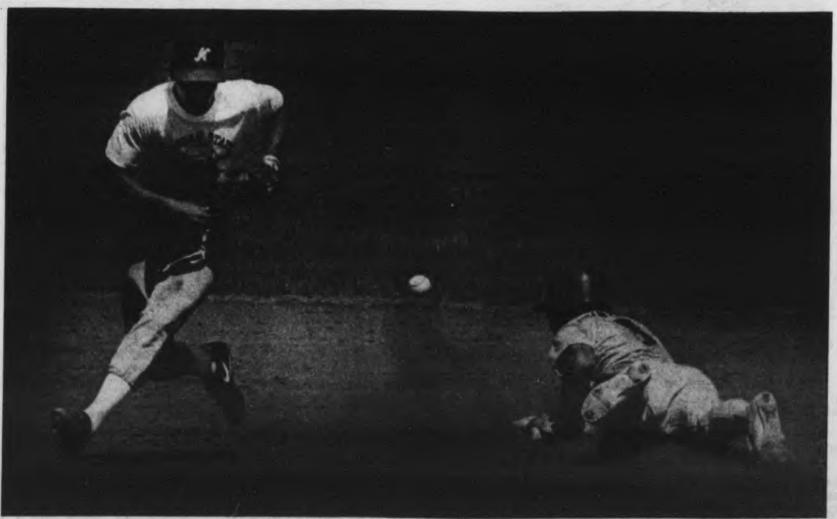

Preliminaries will be completed Tuesday - Monday night U.S. time and the top 12 divers will advance to the finals.

The U.S. men's basketball team, which defeated Spain even more handily than it did in the gold-medal game four years ago, still left Coach John Thompson looking for improvement defensively against

"I'm never satisfied with defense, but the kids put forth effort and intensity," he said. " ... I know and I think they know we have a lot of things to improve on."

Center David Robinson scored 16 points to lead the United States, which won even though Danny Manning was limited to just 15 minutes of playing time because of a stomach

Gould, of Rockford, Ill., is one of the leading U.S. gold-medal contenders. He meets Joseph Marwa of Tanzania in a first-round bout in the 147-pound class.

Band competition draws 200; Homestead Grays claim first

By Theresa Luling Collegian Reporter

The sound of rock 'n' roll shook the K-State campus Friday night. The 1987 OPUS band competition, sponsored by the Union Program Council's Eclectic Entertainment Committee, brought eight bands to the Union plaza.

The bands brought to the stage with them some hard-hitting, headbanging, hand-clapping music. Their sounds vibrated walls from Seaton Hall to the Union and drew a crowd of about 200.

"Response to the competition was great," said Monte Stull, junior in business administration and EEC chairman. "We had to turn away six bands or the competition would have gone all night."

Prior to performing, the bands were required to submit an audition tape to be screened by EEC.

The tapes were judged on originality of music, instrumental ability and vocal ability.

Voters face varied issues

By The Associated Press

Pocketbook issues will dominate as voters around the nation decide more than 200 ballot issues in November. Three states in the West may cut taxes, four others may turn to lotteries to raise revenue, and California may vote to slash auto insurance rates.

Three states may declare English their official language, and three will consider anti-abortion measures.

Among the more interesting local issues: Nevada City, Calif., will weigh a ban on steel-jaw leg traps; voters in Fort Collins, Colo., will consider a homosexual rights amendment; Oregonians will vote on a measure that would impose the nation's toughest statewide smoking ban, and Bostonians may choose to create a city within its borders named Mandela, comprising mostly black neighborhoods. A similar effort to honor the imprisoned South African black leader Nelson Mandela was defeated

By far the costliest and hardestfought battle will center on a jumble of five conflicting referendums that could require California auto insurers to cut their rates to at least 20 percent below November 1987 levels and freeze rates until November

Insurance companies are backing two propositions establishing a nofault policy for car accidents and limiting lawyers' contingency fees.

Money matters are also uppermost in Arkansas, Colorado, South Dakota and Utah.

A proposed "Colorado Taxpayer Bill of Rights" amendment would require voter approval to raise state or local taxes and would restrict property and other taxes and limit increases in state spending. But the signatures that put the measure on the ballot face a challenge this month that could knock it off.

South Dakota Proposition II would limit property taxes to 1 percent of 1984 values for agricultural property and 21/2 percent for nonagricultural. Supporters contend that property taxes have gotten out of hand, and they believe the state should introduce other forms of taxation. Opponents contend the measure would imperil school districts.

Chili cookoff benefits FONE crisis center

By Kevin Kramer Collegian Reporter

The sounds of country-western and rock music mixed with the bubbling of chili cooking Saturday morning at the Second Annual Aggieville Chili Cookoff in Triangle Park.

Fourteen competitors from Manhattan and the surrounding area exhibited their skills and showmanship in the art of making chili to benefit the FONE Crisis Center and other area charities

It was more than a chili contest.

The competitors cheered as people tasted their chili, and created slogans—some of which had little to do with chili—to advertise their products.

Tracey Edwards, junior in management and member of the Cough and Choke Chili Crew, used the hook "Make Chili, Not War" to get chili tasters to the team's booth.

Shelly Trowbridge, junior in business, harped back in response "Don't Worry, Eat Chili" as the other members of her crew cheered.

"The secret to our chili is the use of 'Jayhawk meat,'" joked Mark Smith, junior in horticulture therapy and head chef for the Cough and Choke team.

"The meat is disgusting," he said.
"To make good chili, you have to start off with the worst ingredient."

"We're hoping (the Jayhawk meat) will lead us to a second straight, last place finish in the contest," Smith said.

The team, which wore "no Jayhawks" T-shirts, wanted to epitomize the "health rivalry" between the University of Kansas and K-State, he said.

"We're hoping to invite a team from KU to the contest next year," he

"The lack of any culinary training and being stupid is important to making good chili, and having fun at it," said Carl Reniker, Manhattan, the chief cook for "Carl's Six-Day-Old, Dirty Sock Chili."

"The key to our chili is in the sock," said Glenn Shaffner, technician for the physics department and member of the Dirty Sock team.

"I think I got a piece of the sock," said Suellen Sam, Manhattan, who sampled the chili to determine the winner of the People's Choice Award contest.

"A mother's love is all I use to make my chili," said Debra Hubbard, cook for the Alpha Tau Omega fraternity and the Lone Star Cafe. She placed first in the Competition Style Chili.

Her "Mother Hubbard's Chili" beat last year's winner, John Heritage's Lone Star XXX Chili.

The Homestyle division was won by Brad Cox with his Smokehouse Chili. The People's Choice Award went to the Cough and Choke Chili Crew

Court re-affirms water use rights

By The Associated Press

DENVER — Arkansas River water users are elated over a state Supreme court ruling reaffirming the river compact between Colorado and Kansas.

The court ruled on Monday that the compact already protects the rights of western Kansas farmers without the need to appropriate additional water to them from the Arkansas tributary system in Colorado.

The Kansas farmers, who divert into Frontier Canal on the Colorado side of the state line, had filed for additional water rights from Holly Drain and Cheyenne Creek.

They were competing for the new diversions with another applicant, Gene Hammit, until Pueblo District Judge John Tracey dismissed both applications.

Tracey and the Supreme Court found that Frontier has the right to 5,000 acre-feet of water a year from the Arkansas River basin. The right was incorporated into the Colorado-Kansas compact several years after the compact was approved by both state legislatures and Congress in 1949.

The 40-year-old agreement gives jurisdiction over Frontier Canal water crossing the state line to the Kansas state engineer, not to Colorado officials, according to the court decision.

"Frontier has never asserted that it was shorted water by Colorado water users. It was concerned that Hammit might short it," said Howard Holme, a lawyer for the Southeastern Colorado Water Conservancy District.

Robert Krassa, a lawyer in Pueblo for Frontier Ditch Co., said, "What Frontier was trying to achieve was to keep other Colorado diverters out of Cheyenne Creek or Holly Drain.

"As a practical matter, the headgate on the river is expensive to maintain without putting a bull-dozer in there all the time," Krassa

But the Southeastern district joined Amity Mutual Irrigation Co., the Arkansas Valley Ditch Association, state engineer Jeris Danielson and division engineer Robert Jesse in objecting to Frontier's application.

Amity argued that Frontier has no seniority rights to Holly Drain near the state line and would be diverting illegally.

Tommy Thomson, manager of the Southeasern Colorado district, said he felt the court ruling reaffirmed that the Arkansas River Compact is the proper forum for water disputes between the two states.

Kansas has a lawsuit pending before the U.S. Supreme Court claiming Colorado violations of the compact.

"The compact litigation does claim by Kansas that Colorado water users have used too much of the Arkansas River," Holme said.

Card service successful

By Brenda Birt Collegian Reporter

The Union's newest service, the Wildcat Card, has been wellreceived by K-Staters, said Jack Sills, Union Director.

"We're happy with it overall," he said.

With 1,411 cards in use as of Sept. 16, Sills said the program is a success in its beginning stages. The unofficial goal is to have 2,000 cards distributed by the end of the fall semester, he said.

A Wildcat Card account doesn't have a service charge and can be used anywhere in the Union as cash. For this reason, some students take advantage of the card because of its convenience.

"It's faster than having to get out cash and wait for change. It's just less hassle," said Paula Spradling, junior in apparel and textile marketing.

Union employees are also pleased with the ease of students using the Wildcat Card, because cashiers don't have to make change or ask for identification with the

"I like them," said Jean Johnston, cashier at the Union Bookstore. "They're a lot quicker and easier than Mastercard and Visa."

Union employees have noticed students, faculty and staff are using the card for small and large purchases, though some students have used it for such major purchases as books, said Carol Siemsen, cashier at the Union Bookstore.

Since card users deposit money without collecting interest on it, some students said they think the system takes advantage of users' money, Sills said.

However, because the Union does not own the equipment used for the system and instead leases it from Griffin Technology Inc., the Union really doesn't benefit, Sills

The monthly cost on the equipment is about $4,000.

At this point, he said, the Union hopes to cover the program's cost from additional revenue. He said he hopes people choose to come to the Union to make purchases because they are able to use their Wildcat Cards.

"Right now, I'm not sure you could measure it as a success financially," Sills said. "It's a success service-wise."

Sills said the services that the Wildcat Card provides are more than simply its ease and convenience. The card also saves its users a bank service charge on checks.

Students can receive up to $20,000 toward repayment of federally insured student loans if they enlist or re-enlist in certain critical military occupational skills in the Army Reserve.

Previously, the program paid up to $10,000 toward federally insured loans for participants, regardless of their occupational skills, said Sgt. 1st Class Robert E. Meekins of the U.S. Army Recruiting Station in Manhattan. This benefit is still available.

"Right now the most critical skills are in the medical field," he said.

To be eligible for the program, an applicant must have obtained a federally insured loan after Oct. 1, 1975. The applicant must elect to enroll in the program upon enlistment or reenlistment in the Army Reserve, Meekins said.

Meekins said, the skills required to be eligible for the $20,000 repayment program vary according to the needs of the Army Reserve.

Sgt. Lisa Sippel, 425th Transportation Movement Control Agency, said under the program, 15 percent of the amount of the loan or $500, whichever is greater, is paid toward a participant's student loan for each year of completed service.

Total repayment will not exceed $10,000 for those in non-critical skills and $20,000 for those in certain critical skills, she said.

About 20 percent of the Army Reserve soldiers assigned to the 425th Transportation Movement Control Center in Manhattan are enrolled in the repayment program, Sippel said.

Support grows for omnibus bill despite Reagan's pledge to veto

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - Remember President Reagan's nationally televised pledge in January to veto future catchall spending bills like the $600 billion behemoth Congress sent him last year, and the promises by scores of lawmakers from both parties not to do it again? Guess what may be about to

As the Oct. 1 start of the 1989 fiscal year approaches, increasing numbers of senators and representatives, and their aides, concede that an omnibus spending bill looms as a real possibility.

It wouldn't be as large as last year's. After all, two of the 13 individual appropriations bills that finance the government have already been signed into law, and four others have been sent to Reagan for his signature.

But with the presidential campaign influencing much of what happens in Washington these days, and with the hopper stuffed with legislation Congress wants to pass before leaving town next month, a catchall spending bill may well be the result.

"I don't see any way out of that scenario right now," Sen. Ted Stevens of Alaska, a ranking Republican on the Appropriations Committee, said recently.

Everyone agrees that come Oct. 1, a short-term omnibus bill is virtually unavoidable, providing financing for a week or two for all agencies for which money has not yet been provided for the new fiscal year.

But if spending legislation is not finished by the time Congress adjourns in mid-October, lawmakers would likely either pass another omnibus bill to tide the government over until Congress returns in January, or send the president a package of all remaining appropriations bills and dare him to veto it.

The engine that would drive such a measure would be defense. Reagan has already vetoed a Pentagon budget bill containing arms control language and cuts in the "Star Wars" missile defense system, a rejection that was interpreted as an effort to make defense an issue in the presidential campaign.

Many lawmakers still support those provisions.

no policy for determining whether research is "defensive" or "offensive." Nor is it clear whether K-State would refuse "offensive" research proposals.

Robert Kruh, associate provost and dean of the graduate school, said the foremost consideration for research is that it be educational; he said there is not necessarily a policy to ensure that research is socially responsible.

"There may not be any ethical, moral, socially responsible guidelines," he said.

Although Kruh said Iandolo's research was of a defensive nature, he had not personally seen the proposal. In addition, he did not know of any process by which Iandolo's research or other research proposals were determined to be "defensive."

"I don't think there is any single process. In that sense we may be missing the boat. I think there may be a kind of policy vacuum," he said.

As dean of the Graduate School, he said, he was "probably nominally responsible" for such decisions. The respective department head and college dean might also be involved in deciding whether a research proposal was offensive or defensive.

Terry Johnson, professor of biology and director of the Division of Biology, said he signed the proposal for Iandolo's research, but he did not

"Of course not. There's no way I can read all the proposals that come across my desk," he said.

Johnson said he is unfamiliar with the Army's Biological Defense Program and declined further comment on the guidelines for approving research proposals.

Thomas Isenhour, dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, said he doesn't know of any University policy pertaining to offensive and defensive research. However, he believes the ultimate decision should be made by individual researchers to ensure academic freedom.

"This should be left up to the individual. I'm not going to decide unilaterally the ethics of every faculty member," he said.

James Hamilton, professor of philosophy, said he was surprised by the University's lack of policy.

"Maybe this is something no one has thought about. I don't know what to say, which indicates that maybe this is something I should have thought about. Which indicates that maybe we were all doing something else when we should have been thinking about it. I think this is something the University should have thought about.

"I don't think it is obvious that (this) is something that should be left up to individual faculty members," Hamilton said.

Despite the lack of a formal procedure for determining the nature of research proposals, Kruh said he thought research at K-State was not involved with offensive weapons research and development.

"It's my understanding that research (at K-State) is not to promote aggressive agents of warfare. We are not into a kind of opportunism that some other universities are."

However, Kruh said the difference between what is usually called defensive and offensive research is not always clear.

The line (between offensive and defensive research) can be pretty thin," he said.

Iandolo said, "There are a lot of potential uses of recombinant DNA (research).'

He cited the prevention and cure of diseases and chemical-producing agents to help the environment, among others.

"To me, it's no less noble for the Army to do this than ... (the National Institutes of Health)," Iandolo said.

"It is less painful for students to make adjustments at the entrance of the program, as opposed to dashing their hopes later on," he said.

The college is looking at ways to guarantee success by encouraging students to be better prepared and committed to the program, Lapping said.

"This is already happening in some areas of study," he said.

Math skills, for example, are important to success in the program, Lapping said, adding that they have seen a quantitative increase in the math background of students entering the college.

"Students are responding on their own in attaining skills and the tools they need for success," he said.

Students misuse parking permits

By Chris Koger Collegian Reporter

An estimated 35 percent of the campus parking permits that are reported lost or stolen are actually attempts to get around the system.

"It's been our experience that a large percentage of the so-called 'lost' permits that we recover are being used by friends of the students who reported them lost," said Charles Beckom, K-State Police chief.

Students, faculty and staff members whose permits are lost or stolen are allowed to buy a new permit for $5, compared to the original yearly permit costs of $30 for students and $44 for faculty. It's this reduced rate for the second permit that "tempts some students," Beckom said.

As of Monday, 57 parking permits had been reported to campus police as lost or stolen. Of that number, five have been recovered, according to campus police reports.

"I expect we'll have a large increase in the recovery rate in the next couple of weeks, now that we have new staff members trained and ready," Beckom said.

"I think there's a problem (with stolen permits), but I'm sure it happens at other universities also," said

James Tubach, campus investigator. Once a permit is reported lost or stolen, the permit number is recorded and given to campus police officers and students employed by the University who patrol the parking lots. The students check each permit in the vehicles parked in the lots against the numbers on the stolen list.

When a car with a stolen permit is found, campus police are alerted and a wheel lock is placed on the car, Beckom said.

"We periodically send them out with the intent of looking for stolen permits," he said. "They are very conscientious about looking at each and every permit number, and if there is a car using a stolen permit in the lot, we'll immobilize (the car).

"If we feel the wheel lock won't do the job, we can impound the Tubach said the only sure way to prevent permit theft is to lock all doors after leaving a parked vehicle.

"Hiding the permit will do no good, because it has to be in sight. If everyone would lock their cars, this wouldn't be a problem," he said. "Most people don't know what that (permit) number means to us. We can use that number to tell us where a person lives, who they are and what lot they can park in. If they try to dupe us, it's likely we'll catch them," Beckom said.

Misusing a parking permit can be very expensive, Beckom said. The minimum cost is $30 for the ticket and $20 to remove the wheel lock. If the case goes to court and the county attorney decides to prosecute, court fees are $82, and a fine of $25 to $100 could be imposed, he said.

In addition to the monetary penalties, the person is not allowed to park on campus for the rest of the year. "It is very severe - we can revoke

Bank of Horton 1 of 5 largest student loan suppliers in nation

By Matt Bunker

Collegian Reporter

Guaranteed Student Loans are a necessary evil for many college students, but the federal program has turned into a bonanza for one small-town Kansas bank.

Although the city of Horton has less than 2,000 people, The Bank of Horton is one of the five largest providers of Stafford Loans (formerly called Guaranteed Student Loans) in the nation, said Kevin Struckhoff, senior vice president of the bank.

The bank's growth as a student loan provider has been rapid, Struckhoff said. In 1985, the bank had one full-time employee working with student loans.

"Now, there are over 150 people in the Student Loan Division," Struckhoff said.

The Student Loan Division has its own three-story, 18,000 square foot facility, separate from the main bank, he said. Struckhoff said the bank's involvement in the student loan business has been "very positive. It has created a lot of jobs in the area." The bank's approach to marketing itself as a student loan provider is unique. The bank does very little advertising, relying instead on word of mouth, he said. Bank representatives travel around the country to visit schools and attend meetings with financial aid officers, Struckhoff said. These contacts provide the basis for the bank's growth.

Bank officers got the idea of emphasizing student loans in the late 1970s, Struckhoff said. President Van Norris and Executive Vice President Tony Pizzuti thought it would be a good idea to diversify from basic agricultural and consumer lending, he said.

During the next several years, the bank expanded its student loan business from Northeast Kansas to surrounding states. In 1985, the bank went nationwide.

Struckhoff said the bank expanded by being "very consumer- oriented, with a quick turn-around time for applications."

Critics say biological defense unrealistic

Research funds growing

By Scott Miller Special Projects Writer

Editor's note: This is the second part of a two-part series examining research at K-State for the U.S. Army's Biological Defense Program. With developments in biotechnology, critics of the U.S. Army's Biological Defense Program and some scientists say plans to defend against a biological weapons attack are Gerald Reeck, professor of biochemistry, said while vaccines could be developed against individual agents, it would be difficult to defend against biological warfare agents made with recombinant DNA techniques.

"I don't see how to defend against a sophisticated attack ... You could produce incredibly insidious biological weapons with recombinant DNA methods. There is no way to prevent a country from making harmful strains of a bacterium carrying numerous different forms of a toxic protein. The knowledge is already there and in the scientific literature," Reeck said. Recombinant DNA, or "gene splicing," makes it possible to combine several pathogen-producing genes in one organism. Because of these developments, some scientists are lion in 1986.

debating whether a defense against biological weapons is possible. "This is a societal issue that needs to be addressed," Reeck said. Central to the debate is the idea that research involving biological weapons agents can be categorized as "offensive" or "defensive." Although the United States signed the Biological Weapons Convention of 1972, the Army continues to conduct and fund defensive research. The convention prohibits the development and stockpiling of biological weapons. Since 1981, the Pentagon budget for defensive research grew from $15.1 million to $66 mil-

Part of the Army's program includes funding for research being performed by John Iandolo, professor of biology.

Chuck Dasey, Public Affairs Officer for the U.S. Army Medical Research and Development Command at Fort Detrick, Md., said: "The Army is funding this research because it sees a need to understand toxins like the one Iandolo is working on."

He said such research is necessary for developing a medical defense against a biological weapons attack.

Dasey said offensive and defensive research is similar at the initial level, but defensive research, such as Iandolo's, involves small quantities of a pathogen of relatively pure quality.

Offensive research, on the other hand, requires much greater quantities and is not concerned with purity of the materials, Dasey said.

"By studying the ... toxins that might be used, we can better defend ourselves against biological attack. The Army's position is that defense against a biological attack is not only possible, but a good idea ... because it serves as a deterent," Dasey said.

However, critics of the Biological Defense Program argue that "defensive" research is a problematic term at best.

In a recent statement, Anthony Robbins, professor of public health at Boston University and former president of the American Public Health Association, said: "With the use of modern biotechnology ... it is no longer possible to contemplate effective defenses against biological weapons. The vaccines and sanitary measures that are effective against naturally occurring organisms cannot be developed against the long list of weapons that can be created with biotechnology.

John Daly, professor of history, teaches classes on warfare in the 20th century. He said the distinction between offensive and defensive research is unclear, and that so-called defensive research could easily be used for offensive purposes.

"The argument that (research) is defensive is a bit specious. This blind faith in technology makes me edgy." Daly said there hasn't been a weapons system developed which has not eventually been used. He said the moral capacities of the human race lag behind its technological abilities.

Pope ends pilgrimmage

ROME - Pope John Paul II returned home Monday from a 10-day trip to southern Africa after urging war-stricken Mozambique to find peace with South Africa and calling for an end to racial discrimination.

But South African clergymen who met the pontiff at the end of his pilgrimage said he should have spoken out more forcefully against apartheid.

John Paul's 49th foreign trip, which took him to five nations, was marked by a forced landing in South Africa, a deadly bus hijacking in Lesotho and a papal appeal for aid to victims of Mozambique's drought and civil war.

In a misty-eyed departure speech at Maputo Airport in Mozambique, the pope decried the "scandalous poverty" of the region and the "painful violations of elementary rights of each man," a reference to South Africa's racial policies.

Speaking of the hunger in Mozambique, the pope described "the worried gaze of so many children, the uncertain look of so many youths (and) the weary eyes of so many adults."

He also appealed to "all those who have political responsibilities" in the region to settle their differences peacefully.

BRIEFLY ACROSS NATION

Free-trade agreement approved

WASHINGTON - The Senate approved a landmark freetrade agreement with Canada on Monday, clearing the way for America's part in phasing out tariffs on $131 billion in merchandise that crosses the border each year.

"This agreement is positive for both nations and it is a boost for the world trading system," Sen. Daniel P. Moynihan, D-N.Y., said as the Senate approved the measure 83-9.

The bill, which now goes to President Reagan's desk, would open the door for a 10-year phase-out of tariffs and a number of other trade curbs under the pact signed in January by the president and Prime Minister Brian Mulroney. But political problems on the Canadian side must be resolved first.

Canada's House of Commons has passed a bill to start the tariff phase-out, but majority Liberals in the appointive Senate have bottled it up until Mulroney calls new elections.

Cocaine abandoned on plane

INDIANAPOLIS - An airline passenger abandoned about $1 million in cocaine aboard a jetliner Monday and fled during a stop at the Indianapolis International Airport, police said.

Police Sgt. Bobby J. Flowers said the cocaine weighed more than 7 pounds and has a street value of $1 million. It was found about 6:15 a.m. in a gray bag aboard a USAir flight from Los Angeles to Pittsburgh with a stop in Indianapolis.

The passenger was scheduled to continue on to Pittsburgh, but as the jet left the terminal, a flight attendant noticed the luggage on the seat where the man had been sitting. Worried the bag might contain a bomb, the attendant notified the pilot and the plane returned to the gate, Flowers said. Airport police Officer Charles Hasselburg opened the bag and found it contained four large and six small bags of a white substance and $6,945 in cash. The money was stuffed inside a pair of sneakers, police said.

Flowers said a test confirmed the substance was cocaine. Before leaving the airport, the passenger had gone to the USAir ticket counter where workers said he acted suspiciously and seemed nervous.

Youth's shopping spree halted

OMAHA, Neb. - A 15-year-old boy made a bogus deposit of nearly $30,000 at an automatic teller machine.

Police and others involved in the investigation said the boy went to a teller machine Saturday at a branch of Commercial Federal savings and loan and punched in a combination of numbers to register a deposit of $29,990 into his checking

Then the boy, claiming to be 20, went to a car dealer and wrote out a check for $18,399 for a 1988 Chevrolet IROCmodel Camaro, said Randy Kraft, general manager at Kraft

When the teen-ager was told the new car wouldn't be released until the check cleared, he said he needed a car to attend a wedding Saturday night.

That night, the teen-ager picked up his 15-year-old girlfriend, checked into a hotel at Missouri Valley, Iowa, and paid for two nights' lodging.

During the weekend, the youth wrote at least 10 checks for clothing, food and other items, police said.

The three planned to move to Arizona, apparently intending to get jobs and support themselves, police said.

Sunday evening, the three went to a check-cashing service and the youth wrote a check for $25,000, showing his auto driver's learner's permit as identification.

Todd Wyrick Sr., manager of the check cashing service, said he called police, who arrested the three.

Police said the youth who wrote the checks was held in police custody and the other two were released to their parents.

Candidates talk about money

Democrat Michael Dukakis said Monday that eight years of Republican economic policies had left many Americans fearful of being wiped out financially. GOP nominee George Bush accused Dukakis of using "a strategy of dividing America" by emphasizing differences between rich and poor.

The presidential rivals focused on pocketbook issues as they began a light week of campaigning in advance of their first nationally televised debate Sunday in Winston-Salem, N.C. Both candidates are cutting back on appearances to allow time to study issues and rehearse for the first of two scheduled debates.

While attacking each other on the economy, Dukakis and Bush did not spell out any new economic proposals, although the vice president voiced support for federal limits on certain types of liability lawsuits to help businesses curb insurance costs.

Bush traveled to Bensalem, Pa., where he told the Lower Bucks County Chamber of Commerce that Dukakis, as governor of Massachusetts, had an anti-business bias and "clearly wants to raise taxes."

BRIEFLY THE REGION

Fewer people attend '88 fair

HUTCHINSON - Final attendance figures showed 2,352 fewer people attended the Kansas State Fair in 1988 than in

The fair, which ended its 10-day run Sunday, drew 321,241 visitors, a spokeswoman said Monday. The 1987 fair attendance was 323,593.

Bob Gottschalk, fair manager, had expected the figures to be close. He said threatening weather seemed to have kept some people away from the fair Sunday. The remains of Hurricane Gilbert blew in strong winds from the south, and ominous clouds passed over the fairgrounds, bringing scattered rain.

A weak farm economy in Kansas and shaky aviation industry in Wichita were expected to hurt fair attendance, Gottschalk had said.

Greenhouse effect may cause worldwide drought conditions

By The Collegian Staff

This summer's drought and floods in Bangledesh may be symptoms of the greenhouse effect, according to some scientists.

Scientists from the International Council of Scientific Unions, the World Meteorological Organization and the United Nations Environment Programme believe a rising level of carbon dioxide in the atmosphere is forming a blanket that traps heat, causing a global warming trend which could cause droughts and melt the ice caps.

Although humans and other animals exhale carbon dioxide, the burning of high-carbon fossil fuels, such as coal and oil, is the main source of atmospheric carbon dioxide, according to the scientists' studies.

Another significant factor is the deforestation of the Amazon jungle. Not only does the burning of the forest release large amounts of carbon dioxide, but the absence of trees slows the recycling of carbon dioxide into oxygen, according to studies by Worldwatch Institute in Washington, D.C.

Experiments at K-State's Agronomy Department's Envionmental Transpiration lab have shown that increased levels of carbon dioxide are beneficial to crops like grain sorghum and winter wheat, said Mary Beth Kirkham, professor of agronomy.

The plants grow more efficiently and use water better after processing the extra carbon dioxide, she said.

These experiments were conducted using up to three times the normal atmospheric levels of carbon dioxide, Kirkham said, adding that possible increases in temperature could offset the growth benefits at more realistic carbon dioxide levels.

"First of all, we have to determine whether or not the greenhouse effect has started to become evident yet," she said. "I think that is still up in the air. We know that carbon dioxide levels are increasing. They have been increasing since the middle of the last century. It is anticipated that they might double by the middle of the next

"But we don't know whether or not this increasing level of carbon dioxide is causing an increase in temperature. When people talk about the greenhouse effect, they are concerned about the drought we are having this year and (if it) is related. I think it is still to early to Kirkham said she believes that any potential climate changes won't become evident for decades.

Droughts and climate changes have always been a natural fact of life, and some scientists believe the current drought is part of the normal climatic cycle and is unrelated to the greenhouse effect.

"All these predictions are based on models," Kirkham said, "and we really don't know how good these models are."

"Some models predict a cooling effect due to the carbon dioxide blanket. There could be more chance of precipitation and more clouds in the air resulting in cooler tempratures. In fact, several years ago everyone was talking about starting an ice age."

Any measures taken to decrease carbon dioxide emissions would be beneficial to the environment, said Stephen H. Schneider of the National Center for Atmospheric Research in Boulder, Colorado. Less use of fossil fuels, through development of solar, wind, nuclear and other alternative energy sources, would result in cleaner air and a less acid rain, he said.

Kirkham agreed.

"If higher levels of carbon dioxide are going to increase our temperature, we should take some steps now," Kirkham said.

Students to show livestock

By Kelly Campbell Collegian Reporter

Some K-State students will finish their 4-H eligibility by taking livestock to the annual Kansas Junior Livestock Show Friday through Monday at the Kansas Coliseum in Wichita.

The show is primarily a market show for cattle, hogs and sheep, said Dave Nichols, swine superintendent for the event and associate professor of animal sciences and industry.

"The judges look for outstanding market animals in terms of muscling and leanness. They're looking for outstanding carcass quality and cutability and for production traits," Nichols said.

The Auction of Champions is the last event of the show. The top two animals in each class are sold for premium prices, instead of being sold at floor bid or base price, Nichols said.

Dan Moser, sophomore in animal science and agricultural economics, said he hopes to have a steer in the Auction of Champions. After showing at the event for eight years, Moser said this will be his last year at the Wichita show. He recently lost his 4-H eligibility after turning 19 years old.

Moser and his sister are showing five head of beef cattle, two breeding heifers and three market steers.

"I think we've got a chance to win," Moser said. "We've been to 12 or 15 shows this year and I think everything we've taken has won at least once."

"Everyone's goal is to win Wichita," he said, because the Wichita show is the most competitive show in

"We spend about four hours a day feeding, rinsing, brushing and exercising (to prepare the livestock for showing)," he said.

"Right now I've got the best of two worlds. I don't have to be at home every day doing the chores, yet I still get to show, and that's really the fun part," Moser said.

The show, which began in 1932, has grown to become the largest 4-H and Future Farmers of America show in the state, said Don Good, member of the show's board of governors and professor of animal sciences and

The show will be slightly larger than last year, with 1,600 entries and 795 exhibiters, representing 95

JERUSALEM — Israel launched a test satellite into orbit Monday that reportedly carried surveillance equipment to monitor its Arab enemies. An Arab representative said the launch warrants enhancing Arab Israel became the eighth nation to place a satellite into space.

The three-stage rocket carrying the Horizon-I satellite blasted off at 11:32 a.m. and arched over the Mediterranean Sea in a flash of orange light and a trail of smoke. The launch, which had not been publicly announced in Israel, drew applause from surprised bathers on a beach south of Tel Aviv.

"All in all, very clean work," said Yuval Neeman, head of Israel's space agency. The Horizon-I will remain in orbit for about a month before it burns and disintegrates, Neeman said on Israel radio.

"There are few countries in the world capable of doing this and the citizens of Israel can be proud of their country," Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir said on Israel radio.

Shamir and Foreign Minister Shimon Peres discounted fears the Horizon-I would spur an arms race with Arab countries. "The Arabs and will do anything they can anyway," Peres said on the radio.

But Clovis Maksoud, who represents the Arab League in the United States, said in Washington that the satellite gave Israel "a serious strategic leverage."

He said the launching "warrants enhancing Arab defensive capabilities" so that any Mideast negotiations produce a peaceful outcome "rather than ratifying Israeli hegemony."

Development of the craft came after more than 20 years of Israeli space research and was seen as part of the country's effort to become independent in the defense field. Until now, Israel has relied on the United States to provide satellite pictures, but some officials have complained the U.S. was stingy in supplying the intelligence information.

"If you are fed from the crumbs of others according to their whims, this is very inconvenient and very difficult," said Meir Amit, a former head of Israel's Mossad secret service and now chief of the General Satellite Corp., which makes communications satellites.

"If you have your own, independent capability, you climb one level higher," he said on Israel radio.

Maj. Gen Yehoshua Saguy, a retired head of military intelligence, that they pose fewer political problems than surveillance aircraft or pilotless planes.

"They are the appropriate answer to peacetime situations because in peacetime, you can't fly other kinds of photographic devices over countries," Saguy was quoted as telling the daily Hadashot.

The Israeli satellite weighs about 340 pounds and is believed to be carrying a 6.6-pound payload for surveillance purposes, apparently for monitoring activity in Arab countries, according to a spokesman for Jane's Defense Weekly, the Londonbased defense magazine.

Israel was not believed to have the capability of installing sophisticated surveillance equipment in a satellite, said Tony Banks, a reporter for Jane's who is known to have close ties to Israeli military sources.

"U.S. optical equipment is assumed to have been used in the payload," Banks told The Associated Press in London. But Gerald Steinberg, a former NASA official living in Israel, said any camera contained in the satellite would be too small to provide much information.

Israel joins the United States, the Soviet Union, France, Britain, Japan, China and India in successfully launching a satellite.

Concerts to be in Bramlage

By Steve Walker Staff Writer

Concerts at Bramlage Coliseum will be like any concert in a big city, except they will be in K-State's back

Concerts at Bramlage will not require any drastic changes to the coliseum, said Charlie Thomas, coliseum director. "The scoreboard will be nesting up in the steel," Thomas said. "The sound will be up to the groups playing, but it won't be louder than (what was played in) Ahearn."

It all depends on whether the group wants to blow the audience out of thercounty, or whether they will mix the music for a good sound, Thomas said.

Acoustical material has been placed all the way around Bramlage and a special panel has been put up to reflect sound, Thomas said, Security will be provided by the K-State Police and T-shirt security, which will be composed of students, said Jim Muller, assistant director of Bramlage.

Muller said the T-shirt security workers are also called crowd directors and their primary goal is to see to it that everyone has a good time.

Insight into the subtleties of male bonding

don't really have a column this week. You see, last week was one of those weeks where nothing worth writing about happened. Every time I picked up a paper or turned on the TV there was another story about Hurricane Gilbert - where it was headed, how strong it was, and why its presence signaled the apocalypse. Nothing more I could add there.

Sensing my despondency, my associate Al rang me up and suggested we get the guys together and do some "male bonding."

I was shocked. "Al, are you a -?" Al quickly assured me that male bonding was nothing homosexual. It was just a way for some guys to get together, drink some bonding? beer, beat their chests and make some crude noises.

Indeed, I have been engaging in male bonding all my life and simply not realized it. But I wanted to know more. I ran over to the library, but could find nothing dealing with the subject. Could it be that the social sciences had neglected to make a definitive study of male bonding?

It was obvious that such a study was needed. It was also obvious that I had nothing else to write about this week. I get paid to write these columns, and I get paid according to length. You could stop reading right now and I would still get the same paycheck. ples of the gender.

I figured stuff on Hurricane Gilbert would go about 10 inches. I could make fun of George Bush again and go 16 inches, but even that gets old. But with a comprehensive study of male bonding I could write yards and yards of stuff. Big money.

Thus, here it is: "What Everyone Should Know About Male Bonding.'

I hope you guys out there will enjoy it, I also invite the ladies out there to study it and hopefully understand that beneath its crude, beastly and somewhat offensive veneer, male bonding is a vital part of the socialization process. Honest.

Question one: Why do we have male

Being a male isn't so easy. The gender has come under heavy fire lately. A trip to the local bookstore should bear this out. Books with titles like "Men Who Hate Women," "Men Who Can't Love" and "Women Men Love, Women Men Leave," line the shelves. Books like "How to Find a Man and Hold On to Him" bring to mind scenes of men being beaten over the head and hauled to caves.

Television is no better. An inordinate amount of male-bashing takes place on shows like "Oprah" and "Donahue." Geraldo Rivera, Morton Downey Jr. and Bill Cosby are disgraceful and unrepresentative exam-

Commentary

MARK SCHMELLER Collegian Columnist

Male bonding is a defense against this. Guys need to be told they're OK, even if it's Question two: What's the best time and place for male bonding?

nytime, really. Male bonding requires little planning. You get three or more males in a small area, and you've got potential male bonding. Nonetheless, certain times and places are more conducive to the activity. Times when something important needs to get done tend to produce strong tendencies to male-bond. Weekends and evenings, which, due to mitigating circumstances, cannot act as optimum periods for certain types of male-female bonding, are better-than-average times for

Places in which activities generally recognized as masculine occur also prove fruitful. For example, the Ahearn campsite, save for a few female tents, promises to be a veritable hotbed of male bonding.

Question three: How can I bond better? There are numerous approaches to the art of male bonding, too many to expound on here. But there are certain elemental aspects of male bonding which one should be aware of, lest one run the risk of a male bonding faux pas and the certain ostracism it entails. Here are some of those elements:

What to serve. Nothing fancy. Something to drink, but something which doesn't require mixing. And no wine coolers. Or anything with fruit juice. I don't know why this is; it's just that way. Far be it for me to question age-old traditions.

Solid food is optional.

■ Terms of address. Don't call others "pal" or "buddy." Male bonding requires a higher degree of subtlety. Names should be shortened to one syllable. For example, David becomes Dave. Charles becomes Chuck. And guys named Percy or Elliot can never male bond.

Last names follow the same rule. Nugent becomes Nuge. Vavala becomes Vav. Schmeller becomes Schmell. I don't like being called Schmell, but in male bonding a certain amount of give-and-take is required.

he rule of monosyllabic address is important, as prolonged periods of male bonding tend to hinder the abilities of the participants to form longer words. It is best to get the short names established early to avoid any later breakdowns in communication. Here is a sample monosyllabic conversation:

First male: "Hey Bob. Beer?" Bob: "Sure thing, Schmell." "How 'bout you Vav?"

Vav: "Uh huh."

Conversation. All conversation doesn't have to be simplistic, crude or obscene. Those more refined males with proper experience in male bonding may attempt intelligent conversation exceeding monosyllables, but rules govern these conversations as well.

Although topics must be confined to celebrations of masculine things, this poses few problems. Consider all the great male achievements: The Theory of Relativity, aviation, the steam engine, the Salk vaccine, Pasteurization, Beethoven's symphonies, Wagner's operas, Platonic philosophy, and the Gettysburg Address. These are just some of the great things done by men. There are more, but I forget them at the moment.

This concludes today's lesson. By the way, I got 21 inches out of this.

Library periodical cuts harm graduate students

Tryouts have been held, cuts have been made and the new lineup has been posted. But when the spring season begins, at least one group of fans will not be pleased - the graduate students.

More than 1,600 periodicals will no longer be carried by Farrell Library this spring, saving the library an estimated $283,000 in periodical subscriptions alone. Farrell usually spends about $1.3 million each year on its 9,400 active serials.

According to library officials, these cuts will have no effect on current events research for undergraduates. The cuts were targeted for expensive and highly specialized journals and magazines that did not have a broad appeal to most students.

Supposedly, only upper level faculty members will notice the change.

But who really is going to feel the effects of removing the specialized journals from the shelves of Farrell? Although some faculty may miss the opportunity of reading in their favorite areas of study, it will be the graduate students who bear the brunt of the cutbacks in specialized materials.

Research is vital to graduate students seeking to earn postgraduate degrees. Their research becomes the basis for their final thesis. Although under the supervision of full-time faculty, graduate students are also the hands-on members of a university's cutting edge, state-of-the-art research.

The University officially recognizes the vital contribution that graduate students give to the college in research and outside

K-State has indirectly contradicted itself by cutting back the specialized publications that allow the graduate students to keep abreast of changes in their field. Casual inquiry in certain specialized areas will virtually be eliminated. Farrell admittedly may be in a situation where it can no longer afford to pay for subscriptions of these specialized journals. But at the same time, the University's graduate research programs can ill afford the loss of part of their information base.

An editorial in the Sept. 14 Collegian faults Vice President George Bush for his position on the pledge of allegiance affair.

According to the editorial, George Bush is unaware of a landmark 1943 Supreme Court decision declaring that mandatory pledge requirements violate First Amendment rights to freedom of religion. Your editorial writer fails to recognize that the 1943 decision deals with a different issue.

In 1943, the Supreme Court ruled that children cannot be forced to participate in the pledge of allegiance because, with mandatory school attendance, that would force religious beliefs on them.

In contrast, the law vetoed by Dukakis would have forced teachers to lead the pledge of allegiance. A teacher voluntarily enters into an employment contract with a school; the school has recognized rights to impose conditions on such a contract. Specifically, the school can and should insist that teachers present material that is considered to meet the demands of its customers, the children. A teacher who refuses to lead the pledge of allegiance imposes beliefs on children by removing their choice of participating or not participating in the pledge.

Children are required to attend school. In contrast, no person can be required to enter a contract as a teacher if that conflicts with personal beliefs.

Your editorial writer appears to prefer Dukakis over Bush. Our society explicitly protects the rights to such freedom of choice. But, an attempt to justify an opinion or preference on the basis of an argument that fails the test of logic can only weaken the attempt.

ing to the preceeding quote, I followed a course of action that should have proven effective. Johnson also was quoted as saying that fighting a citation is a long battle. No kidding. My final denied appeal said, "It's your word against the ticketer's and we must accept the policeman's charge." This goes directly against the Constitution. The burden of proof is on the accuser. In other words, innocent until proven guilty.

I'm not the only one that is disappointed in the appeals board. I am only one of many who feel they've been ripped off. The article said Johnson feels the board is

Give it a rest, Lloyd.

Appeals don't work Bush not liberal

On Sept. 8 you ran an article titled "Parking tickets can be avoided, contested." Allow me to point out some fallacies in this article. Last semester I received a ticket in lot B-2 with the reason being "No valid permit." This led me to believe a mistake had been made. My permit was valid and in place, and the car was parked legally. I appealed.

In the article, Audra Dietz wrote, "One of the most common excuses (Lloyd) Johnson (appeals board chairman) said he sees on appeal is that the parking permit fell off the rearview mirror. In this case the driver must immediately inform the police department that the driver does have a permit and prove the driver was legally parked."

When I appealed, the validity of my permit was proven with photocopies of my permit and receipt. I was informed by Johnson that permits are not valid unless visible. Accord-

Today's gripe is Mark Schmeller's article on George Bush and what a liberal he is. C'mon, this is the guy who, if elected president, probably would beat-up Congress if they did something wrong! Let's go down a few of Mr. Schmeller's arguments about George Bush's liberalism".

"Liberals are generally associated with huge federal governments and expensive programs." Does this mean that all presidents are liberals? I don't think so.

"(His platform calls for a) bigger defense budget." Yeah, Mr. Schmeller. Those liberals are always trying to build more nukes. Yeah.

Gosh, I'd love to go on, but I'm afraid that not enough room is allocated to refute all of Mr. Schmeller's arguments.

Use of condoms provides protection against warts

By Eva Craig Collegian Reporter

Using two condoms at once may seem unusual, but it is a suggested precaution against sexually transmitted diseases - especially genital

Since the 1960's, the rate of occurence of STDs has risen, which is due largely to the invention of the birth control pill, said Dr. Larry Moeller, physician at Lafene Student Health

"Within the last few years we have seen a real increase in all STDs, but especially in chlamydia and genital warts," he said.

Moeller said condoms are not perfect and noted the suggestion of using two condoms because condoms can break or tear.

The occurence of STDs on college slightly higher than the national average. This is due mainly to the age of college students - the 15-25 age Moeller said.

Chlamydia is the most common

STD, but genital warts aren't far behind, he said.

"The pill presented a decreased use of condoms, and condoms create a barrier for all STDs, not just the Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome (AIDS)," Moeller said.

Genital warts are caused by the Human Papilloma Virus, of which there are 50 sub-types. Genital warts can only be transmitted through sexual contact. They can have an incubation period of up to 18 months.

The only symptom of genital warts is the wart or lesion that appears. The biggest problem in treating them is trying to detect the warts - it is a "silent infection," Moeller said.

The lesions or warts may appear in and around the genital and anal areas campuses is increasing at a rate of the male or female and usually stay confined to the "underwear" area, he said.

In some cases a wart never forms group is more sexually active and has and the only way it can be discovered more partners than other age groups, is when lab results appear abnormal, and then a special test using an acidic solution must be performed, said Dr. Paula Davis, physician at Lafene.

Some types of genital warts can be cancerous; therefore, Moeller said he strongly urges women to get annual exams and for men to perform selftesticular examinations regularly.

"If untreated, the warts will become large, itchy, and uncomfortable," Davis said.

The treatment involves weekly applications of one of three chemicals or, very rarely, surgical removal. The treatment lasts as long as it takes for the warts to disappear, which can be as short as two weeks.

After the first clear examination. Moeller said he advises the use of a condom for one year. At the end of the year Moeller said he has patients schedule another exam.

'The increase in STDs is alarming," he said. "People have to take their own risk to STDs and AIDS seriously and modify their behavior."

Average scores on SAT tests drop for first time in 8 years

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK - Average SAT scores lost ground in 1988 for the first time in eight years, but minority students continued a decadelong pattern of impressive gains,the College Board reported Monday.

Scores on the verbal section of the Scholastic Aptitude Test fell two points to an average 428, while the average on the math section was unchanged at 476, according to the board's annual report.

Both portions of the multiplechoice exam taken each year by 1.1 million college-bound students are scored on a scale of 200-800, with a combined 1600 being perfect.

The combined math-verbal average of 904 marked the first decline in eight years. The national average hit a low of 890 in 1980, recovered a bit to 906 by 1985 and was unchanged until this year's slight decline.

Ironically, the release of the SAT averages coincided with the planned departure Tuesday of U.S. Education Secretary William J. Bennett, who during his 3½ years in office had credited the Reagan administration with spurring reforms which until this year had helped produce gradually improving SAT scores.

In a statement Monday, Bennett blamed the school establishment for the falloff in scores: "No medals for America in this news. I said in April that 'the absolute level at which our improvements are taking place is unacceptably low.' Today it's a bit lower, and still not acceptable. C'mon, team! Back into training."

College Board officials nonetheless cheered the "stability" of test scores in recent years.

"We're pleased, frankly, that there is as much stability in the scores as the data suggests," board President Donald M. Stewart told reporters. He noted that scores were generally holding up even though the number of test-takers has risen 13 percent since 1986 and the number of minority test-takers was up 23,066 in the last year alone. Minority students in the class of '88, especially blacks, posted the strongest gains. Verbal scores among blacks last year rose an average of two points to 353, and math scores rose seven points to 384 — doubly impressive since the number of black test-takers rose 39 percent in three years from 70,156 in 1985 to 97,483 last year, said the board's research director, Robert G. Cameron.

Stewart said it was unclear why minority students were gaining. One explanation is that federal programs such as Head Start begun in the 1960s and 1970s and aimed at assisting poor students are now paying off in higher minority SAT

Group sponsors cultural displays

By Mary Gomez Collegian Reporter

In an effort to increase awareness of the many cultures represented at the University and to aquaint students with the international organizations on campus, the UPC Issues and Ideas Committee is sponsoring International Affairs Awareness Week today through Thursday in the Union.

"This is our first International Awareness Week and so far we've had a very positive response to the idea. We've gotten good feedback about it from the international students," said Sandy Skelton, committee member.

In addition to displays assembled by the different international organizations on campus, there will be displays of various cultures and music from around the world.

"We hope the students won't be afraid to go up to the displays and ask questions. We encourage them to take advantage of this week," said Connie Coltrane, committee member.

Of the 17,238 students enrolled during the 1988 spring semester, more than 2,000 were from a country other than the United States

"Cultures Around the World" is today's theme. Displays from various cultures including the Middle East, the Indian subcontinent, South America, and the American Midwest will be on the Union's main floor from 10:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. At noon, Latin American folk music will be played in the Union Courtyard.

Wednesday's theme, "The World at K-State," will provide international organizations on campus a chance to display their individual characteristics. The Association of Puerto Rican Students, Anthropology Club, Arab Student Association, Chinese Student Association, Chinese Student and Scholar Association, India Student Association. Korean Student Association, Pakistan Student Association and others will have display tables in the Union from 10:30 a.m. to 3:30

At noon Wednesday, the UPC Eclectic Entertainment Committee and the Issues and Ideas Committee will sponsor Costa Rican singer Eduardo Arce-Diaz. He will sing Latin American songs in the Union Courtyard.

"Politics Affects Our World" is Thursday's theme. On the main floor of the Union from 1:30 p.m. to 3:30 p.m., there will be students sharing their views of world politics at organizational displays.

Some of the organizations that will have displays are the Coalition for Human Rights, the Coalition of Students in Solidarity with Palestine, Students in Solidarity with Central America, Students for Educational Awareness, and Amnesty International.

Following the displays, there will be a pre-lecture forum concerning possible issues that may be addressed by Dale Van Atta in his featured lecture Thursday, 8 p.m. in Forum Hall.

Van Atta, an investigative reporter, will deliver his lecture, "Scandals, Scoundrels and Saints: The News Behind the Headlines."

Report shows 100,000 homeless

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - At least 100,000 of America's children are homeless on any given night and that doesn't include those who have run away from home or been kicked out by their parents, the National Academy of Sciences estimated Monday.

While male alcoholics and former mental patients still make up a large portion of the homeless, the fastest growing group of people with no place to live are children under 18, said the academy's Institute of Medicine.

"The committee feels strongly that the growing phenomenon of homeless children is nothing short of a national disgrace that must be treated with the urgency that such a situation demands," said the report.

One recommendation aimed directly at helping children: Federal support for enriched day care and Head Start programs should be expanded and coupled with outreach efforts to make homeless parents aware of help available for their children.

A recommendation for the homeless in general: Permit the use of food stamps at restaurants so prepared meals will be available to people who don't have kitchens.

A controversy has erupted over the report, triggered by a majority of the committee formed by the institute to do the study, which was ordered by Congress.

Nautilus Towers-Aggieville

Ten of the 13 members of that panel, chaired by Bruce C. Vladeck, the president of United Hospital Fund of New York in New York City, endorsed a supplemental statement that the National Academy of Sciences refused to publish in the

The only mention of it appears in a footnote on page 136 of the 242-page book. It says, in part, that the committee members "unanimously wish to express their strong feeling that the recommendations are too limited in addressing the broader issues of homelessness - especially the supply of low-income housing, income maintenance, the availability of support services, and access to health care for the poor and uninsured."

Vladeck, interviewed Monday night by telephone, said he supports the supplemental statement because the report as published, which focuses on health and human needs of the homeless, "doesn't adequately convey our sense of outrage and dismay at the phenomenon of homelessness."

He said the supplementary statement calls for three specifics:

"First, an expansion of federal support of low-income housing to at least the 1981 budget levels from which they've been cut 70 percent

"Second, for development of a range of community-based residential treatment services for the mentally ill and substance abusers, and "Third, for increasing the minimum wage to a level that makes adequate housing affordable."

Dr. Frank Press, the National Academy of Sciences, blocked publication of the statement. He was quoted in today's editions of The New York Times as saying he did so because "the language was charged and polemical and emotional."

"The academy has a certain credibility to maintain and must assure Congress and the executive branch that it will stick to the data and minimize the intrusion of values as much as possible," Press said. "This panel was so repelled by what they saw that they wanted to go beyond their charge and give their views. We told them that was not our process. If they wanted to do it, they had to do it independently."

He said he was glad the members were issuing their statement but said the main report was "terrific as it stands."

In the report, the committee applauded changes that allow use of food stamps at shelters and soup kitchens. But it said operators of those facilities need to be educated in the principles of sound nutrition and the special nutritional needs of the homeless.

The committee also sought to dismiss fears of city government officials who might conclude that increasing their efforts to help the homeless would only draw more homeless people to their cities.

The great majority of homeless people are long-term residents of the city where they live, the committee said. What's more, it said, what causes homeless people to move to another city is the prospect for work, not the prospect for welfare. If jobs aren't available, they tend not to stay

As for homeless children, the report said there are no national studies pinning down the numbers, but using "even the most conservative estimates" would mean that:

On any given night, 735,000 people in America have no home in which to sleep and must resort to streets, shelters, institutions or other makeshift quarters. Citing research by the Alliance Housing Council, a homeless advocacy group, the committee concluded that 1.3 million to 2 million people will be homeless for one night or more in the course of a ■ Most of the 735,000 homeless on any given night are alone, but at least a quarter of them are members of families and 55 percent of the family members are children.

County officials question census

By The Associated Press

How many people live in Riley County? It's a matter of concern to local officials, who are questioning preliminary figures from the 1988 Kansas State Census.

The U.S. federal census of 1980 counted 63,505 residents in Riley County. The last state census, done in 1979, showed only 41,024, because students, soldiers and aliens aren't included.

Preliminary figures from the new state census, which will be used in reapportioning state legislative districts for the 1990 election, show the county with only 34,097 residents.

That doesn't count about 13,500 of an estimated 18,000 K-State students, or about 12,000 of the 17,000 soldiers from Fort Riley who live in done uniformly across the state." the county.

"Obviously, it could mean that Manhattan will have one-third of a house seat less influence in the Legislature, numerically," Kansas House Majority Leader Joe Knopp, R-Manhattan, said of the state

The Kansas census law says students and soldiers are to be counted in their hometowns, rather than their place of residency at the time of the

"I don't think it's really true that Riley County's population has dropped by 5,000 since the 1979 census," said Brad Bryant, the 1988 Kansas census director. "There is some question about the accuracy of the 1979 census because it was not

The 1979 census was taken by county officials and reported to the Department of Agriculture. Bryant says state census officials think their 1988 count is more accurate "because it was centralized from Topeka."

'We didn't just tell some county officials to count," Bryant said.

But Knopp and the Riley County Commission question whether methods used to determine whether K-State students were permanent county residents are valid. They plan to discuss it further at a meeting

"My concern is that in the 1988 census, the secretary of state's office may have interpreted the letter of the law too strictly," Knopp said.

For example, he said, the state wouldn't count KSU residence hall students as Riley County residents, regardless of whether they were registered to vote in the county, whether they lived in Manhattan during summers or whether they paid taxes on a car here.

"When we go to count the people I represent, I ought to at least represent those people who are voting for me," Knopp said.

"We've seen the numbers and we have no concern that the secretary of state did a good job in counting,' said Manhattan City Manager Mike Conduff. "But the underlying issue is that the law is inconsistent. If these kids live here nine months a year and vote here, they should be represented

Band hopes to claim 'marchathon' record

By The Associated Press

CANEY - They still have to go through the official documentation, but high school band members raising money to fund a hoped-for trip to Washington have claimed a world "marchathon" record.

Students from Caney Valley High School started playing and marching at 7:30 a.m. Saturday, and some of them kept going until 8:30 p.m., band director Steve Gordon said.

They followed a route of about five miles in this southeast Kansas community along the Oklahoma border. By the time it was over, they had covered either 39.4 miles, according to one car's odometer, or 38.7, according to another, Gordon said.

In either event, they're claiming to have surpassed a musical march record of 37.9 miles listed in the Guiness Book of World Records.

"We started with 49 kids and one director, and almost everybody made 25 miles," said Gordon. "Then the test of endurance started. I believe we wound up with 18 students-and one director."

He said the regulations as prescribed by the Guiness Book of World Records called for at least 10 members of the entourage to be playing organized music all the time, with a five-minute break allowed every hour.

The band played the songs "Whiz Kids" and "Z-Rock" over and over again, later adding the school fight song, "Stand Up And Cheer."

"We balanced it between percussion and winds," Gordon said. Once we were down to 18, we had the winds doubling on percussion."

Gordon, who is in his fourth year as band director at the school of about 250 students, said he contacted the Guiness people about a year ago to get information about seeking a record.

"They could still deny us the world record if our documentation isn't up to par," he said. "They couldn't send anybody to witness it, so we are in the process of compiling documentation and pictures. We had to have prominent people in the community witness and attest to what we did. Once we submit it, it's up to them."

Gordon said the band is hoping to get an invitation to go to Washington, either to represent Kansas in the inaugural parade, or for the Cherry Blossom festival.

Fund-raising efforts that began in January had already brought in $8,500 before the weekend march, for which supporters were asked to pledge donations based on the distance covered.

Americans not convinced by candidates

Bob Lundquist, dairy food proccessor at Call Hall, fills a Purple Pride ice cream carton with cherry-pecan ice cream. The dairy bar sells milk, butter and cheese in addition to an array of ice cream flavors.

Cows raised on campus used for making ice cream products

By Mark Rader Collegian Reporter

Call Hall is known for its ice cream, but few people realize the ice cream and other dairy products are made from cows raised on campus.

The K-State dairy plant, located in Call, receives all of its milk from the dairy unit north of the campus, said Kathleen Finnesy, supervisor of the dairy sales counter.

The plant officials buy the milk from the dairy unit, pump what they need and sell the rest to Mid-Am Dairy in Wamego, Finnesy said.

The plant supplies milk to Derby and Kramer food centers which usually use between 1,800 to 2,500 gallons of milk per week, she said. However, the amount depends on students in the residence halls, so the centers' officials may cancel parts of their weekly orders.

The plant processes on Monday, Wednesday and Friday.

Besides supplying milk to the food centers, the plant processes various flavors of ice cream, butter and several varieties of cheese.

The dairy bar sells two types of ice cream. The regular ice cream has 12 percent butterfat content, and is sold by the cone and the half gallon. The second type is vanilla ice cream with 16 percent butterfat, so it is "very rich," Finnesy said. That vanilla is sold by the half gallon.

"The dairy plant and dairy sales work very, very closely together, but at the same time they are a separate entity," Finnesy said.

The dairy bar has a large influence on the type of products the plant

'(The dairy bar) will request more of certain products if there is a demand for that product," she said.

The dairy bar receives the products from the plant and then prices them as any other retailer would. Finnesy said the bar is competitive on prices and usually cheaper.

The plant and dairy bar are manned with 16 student workers and four full-time classified employees, she said.

workers and the plant has seven people in processing. About half of these students are on the work-study program, Finnesy said.

The students who work in the plant are responsible for the production of the dairy products, she said. Although there is no class which requires students to work in the plant, the majority of the students are dairy science majors.

Karen Cooper, senior in food nutrition, has worked at the dairy bar since July. After three years of working at other jobs on campus, Cooper said this was the best job she has had.

"(The dairy bar) is excellent, you come in contact with the public and you make them happy. People tell me this is the best ice cream they have ever had," she said.

Most of the sales are to regular customers, Finnesy said. "They buy it because they like it and it is a little cheaper than in a store," she said.

"We usually don't sell off of the campus unless the buyer comes to us," she said. "An example would be moved to Call. Since Weber has re-opened for classes, the dairy bar still has a lot of student business, but fewer faculty come in on a regular basis, Finnesy

"(The dairy) actually has a little more business on Fridays, with the opening of meat sales in Weber," she said. "People will go to Weber to pick up meat and then stop by the dairy bar to buy some milk or ice

The bar's best advertising is by word-of-mouth, but they have issued coupons this year, Finnesy said.

Of course you've heard of the Four Horseman of the Apocalypse. And many football fans can recall the Notre Dame football team's "Four Horseman" backfield.

K-State's volleyball team can now claim a fearsome quartet of its own with the "Four Musketeers" - senior volleyball players Shawnee Call, Val Kastens, Mary Kinsey and Mary Mignano. Coach Scott Nelson said this team is the best by far of any he's coached in his nine years at K-State. That's a strong statement considering last year's team shattered 23 records. But the Wildcats' 7-0 start is a record breaker in its own right, and is due largely to the seniors' play.

"Experience is a key factor that all volleyball teams need," Nelson said. "We really have some talented individuals on this team the best we've ever had."

During the summer, these four women roomed together. From this experience came their nicknames: Kinsey is "Mare Mare," Mignano is "Mino," Kastens is "Valley," and Call's first name is simply shortened to

"Shawn." Call, an All-America candidate, heads the list of returners. Last season, Call set six school records for four-game totals in kills (25), hitting percentage (.577) and in five-game totals in kills (33), attacks (74), solo blocks (eight) and digs (35).

Citing passing and defense as her strengths, Call is vying to become the first three-time All-Big Eight player in K-State volleyball history. Call's unofficial report card, as complied by the other seniors, says she is an all-around player, well-balanced, with a 36-inch vertical jump that enables her to hit over blockers.

The 5-foot-11 outside hitter from Ellsworth, who came to K-State because it was a "family tradition," is unsure of her plans after graduation.

"I want to get my degree, and then maybe play on a pro team, but, most of all, I want to be able to take the things that I have learned in volleyball and apply it to the things that I do in everyday life. Things like teamwork and responsibility," Call said.

Kinsey owns school records in three-game totals in kills (23), attacks (47) and digs (26). She is just 26 service aces shy of setting a school record. The record now stands at 167.

"As an elementary education major, I just want to get my degree and be the best teacher that I can and just be able to go out and do a good job and to apply everything that I have learned in my five years at K-State," Kinsey

At 5 feet 10, Kinsey relies on the mental part of her game.

"I'm pretty small for an outside hitter, so I really have to rely on my brain to pull off shots as opposed to just hitting the ball stright on," Kinsey said.

SEATTLE - Mark Langston pitched a four-hitter and struck out 11 Monday night and the Seattle Mariners beat the Kansas City Royals 4-0.

Langston, 13-11, has two shutouts in his last four games. The 28-year-old walked four in his eighth complete game, Seattle's 10th shutout this season, including five in September.

Bo Jackson struck out four times, giving him nine strikeouts in his last nine at-bats.

Steve Balboni drove in two runs with a single and his 20th home run since Seattle picked him up off waivers from the Royals in June. Balboni's solo homer, his 22nd, put Seattle ahead 2-0 in the third.

Floyd Bannister, 11-13, gave up eight hits struck out three and walked one.

Nicaraguan leaders meet with rebels

By The Associated Press

GUATEMALA CITY - Representatives of the Nicaraguan government met with rebel leaders Monday for the first time in three months, but both sides remained sharply divided on ways to end seven years of civil war.

The leftist Sandinista government and the U.S.-backed rebels, known as Contras, began a two-day conference as a preliminary step to resuming the high-level peace talks that collapsed on June 9.

The rebels recently proposed that

Nicaragua is willing to resume talks, but they must be held in Managua, Victor Hugo Tinoco, Nicaraguan assistant foreign minister and the head of the Sandinista delegation, said at a news conference before Monday's meeting.

The rebels have opposed holding the talks in the Nicaraguan capital and have said high-level negotiations cannot resume until the government releases more than 40 antigovernment demonstrators arrested in July.

A fragile March 21 cease-fire high-level talks resume Sept. 26, but remains in effect in Nicaragua, but the two sides disagree on a location. each side accuses the other of violating the truce.

> Tinoco said he expected the Guatemala meeting to result in "a cease-fire for 30 or 60 days that could be extended indefinitely."

> Both sides agreed on March 23 to seek a negotiated settlement to the conflict the government says has claimed the lives of 28,000 Nicaraguans.

The agreement called on the rebels to lay down their arms in exchange for democratic reforms. Shortly before peace talks broke off in June, the Sandinistas proposed a timetable for disarmament and political reforms.

But the Contras rejected the plan, saying it did not go far enough. They demanded freedom for political prisoners and democratic reforms in Nicaragua.

Tinoco said the Sandinistas will urge that a cease-fire verification commission funded by $10 million from congress be put into operation. Commission members would include the secretary-general of the Organization of American States, Joao Baena Soares, and Nicaraguan Cardinal Miguel Obando y Bravo.

Entire government in Poland resigns

By The Associated Press

WARSAW, Poland - The government of Prime Minister Zbigniew Messner resigned Monday after strong criticism of its management of the economy. A lawmaker later asked Parliament to legalize the banned Solidarity labor movement.

Messner, prime minister since 1985, announced in a speech to parliament that he and all 19 ministers were resigning. He defended his government's performance but conceded "mishaps" in not standing up to inflationary wage demands.

It was the first time in Poland's postwar history that the entire government stepped down. Messner said the mass resignation would make it easier for parliament to make "proper decisions" about the future government.

The Sejm, or parliament, approved the resignations near the end of a 12-hour session Monday by a vote of 359-1, with 17 abstentions. A new government was expected to be named by the Sejm this month. Messner or some of his ministers could be reappointed.

The issue of Solidarity and the name of Lech Walesa, founder and former head of the outlawed independent labor federation, came up repeatedly in the free-wheeling discussion of the economy and government that followed the resignations.

Inflation caused a wave of labor strikes in April. A second wave of strikes in August ended when authorities and Walesa agreed to hold broad-based talks, now scheduled for next month, that may include the issue of legalizing Solidarity.

Solidarity "should regain its proper place in the trade union movement," Ryszard Bender, an independent parliament member from Lublin, told parliament Monday. "Apart from associations, apart from Solidarity, ... there is also a need to have new political parties."

It was the first call in parliament for legalizing the union movement since Solidarity was suppressed in December 1981 with the imposition of martial law.

Turning to address Polish leader Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski, Bender urged that Jaruzelski and Walesa, "the first Nobel Peace laureate in Polish history," meet and make a joint statement concerning Poland's "most vital interests."

Jaruzelski smiled slightly but showed no other reaction to the remarks.

Later Sejm deputy Aleksander Legatowicz, an economist, said the government failed because "it closed itself off from criticism."

"There are people allergic to the word 'socialism' and others allergic to the word 'Solidarity,'" he said. Solidarity, the first free trade union movement in the Soviet bloc, emerged from a tumultuous summer of labor unrest in 1980.

About 30 deputies spoke Monday, with several endorsing the planned round-table talks with the opposition. Bender was the only speaker openly calling for reinstatement of Solidarity.

Under Poland's system, the Communist Party led by the Politburo is the actual seat of power and appoints the government through its majority in parliament. As first secretary of the Politburo, Jaruzelski is the country's leader. The government is responsible for executing the party's goals.

The party leadership has maintained that its goals for reforming the economy and political system have been correct but implementation by Messner's government has been faulty. The Soviet press also has recently criticized the Polish government.

In Washington, State Department spokesman Charles Redman welcomed the understanding reached Friday between government negotiators and Walesa on future talks.

Redman said Monday that "a process of national reconciliation may have begun, and all sides should strive to realize its historic

Police arrest protesters

By The Associated Press

WICHITA - Two demonstrators who chained and padlocked themselves to a concrete block were arrested Monday outside an east Wichita clinic where abortions are performed.

Tim Murphy of Chicago and Michelle Ruebke of Hesston were booked into jail on misdemeanor loitering charges. They were immediately released on personal recognizance bonds.

The two had chained themselves to a 300-pound concrete block in the driveway of the Women's Health Care Services clinic during Firefighters twice used bolt cutters to try to break the chains but the efforts failed. The pair finally unlocked the padlocks and surrendered when police brought a locksmith to the site.

They had been advised they were under arrest about two hours earlier, but police had allowed them to remain in the driveway, which they only partially blocked.

Periodic protests have been staged at the clinic, which was heavily damaged in June 1986 by a an anti-abortion protest that homemade pipe bomb. No one involved about 100 participants at ever was charged in the bombing.

> A crowd formed at the clinic about 7 a.m. Many participants carried anti-abortion signs. Police said the crowd had thinned out within two hours, but the demonstration continued.

Petition proposes pull out

By The Associated Press

LINCOLN, Neb. - A petition proposal that would withdraw Nebraska from a five-state nuclear waste compact doesn't violate the state constitution and can be put before voters in November, Lancaster County District Judge Earl Witthoff ruled today.

In another case, District Judge Jeffre Cheuvront dismissed a case aimed at requiring ballot language in the petition proposal to specify that Nebraska could face penalties for withdrawing from the compact.

Both cases involved Initiative 402. Nebraska has been chosen to host a storage site for low-level radioactive waste.

In the first case, Witthoff rejected a challenge to the constitutionality of the petition proposal. That suit had been filed by civil engineer Hal Schroeder and was financed by four out-of-state utility companies.

In the second case, attorneys for Dr. David J. Hoelting of Pender, asked Cheuvront to require that ballot language be changed to spell out that Nebraska could face penalties, obligations and other liabilities if the regional compact is abandoned.

In arguments Thursday, attorney Larry Ruth, representing Hoelting, argued that the ballot language is "unfair and insufficient and gives the implication that withdrawal from the compact washes our hands of the Nachama Wilker, Executive Director of the Committee for Responsible Genetics, said: "There's really no way to defend a civilian population against a biological weapons attack.

Wilker said the Army's defense plans are for military targets, not the civilian population.

James Urban, professor of biology, said he saw a need for defensive

"What Iandolo is doing is defensive (research). The Army is interested in that because it could pose a threat to its soldiers," Urban said.

However, he said the difference between offensive and defensive research is "semantic."

"Even though I abhor war, I could justify (the use of) biological weapons. With biological weapons, you could have everybody in Russia in the toilet for three days with an upset stomach, and if they're in the toilet for three days, they won't be shooting missiles or guns. The occupying forces could move in and accomplish a peaceful objective," Urban said. The purpose of biological weapons was not to kill, he said, but to incapacitate people.

"A sick soldier is an expensive soldier. A dead one doesn't cost anything," Urban said.

The Army can defend itself against biological warfare agents,

"Absolutely (we can). We could defend ourselves against all biological weapons ... if we had the time to identify the toxins and develop

"If we couldn't defend (ourselves) from biological weapons, the Russians couldn't defend their own troops," Urban said.

However, Jonathan King, professor of molecular biology at Massachussetts Institute of Technology and a member of the Committee for Responsible Genetics, disagreed.

In a recent article for the committee's newsletter, GeneWATCH, King argues that defensive research can be the first step toward developing offensive capabilities.

"Because of the spreading, reproducing character of biological weapons agents, plans to develop an offensive capacity first require the ability to defend one's own population, crops or domestic animals. As a result, offensive and defensive programs in biological weapons have the same components," he wrote.

According to King, "Militaryfunded vaccine research has military goals, whether the individual investigators can perceive them or not."

Reeck said, "Any of us working on isolating genes from one organism and transferring ... those genes (to) another organism is contributing to a base of knowledge that makes it easier to produce biological

In July, the committee sponsored a pledge "not to engage knowingly in research or teaching that would further the development of biological warfare agents."

Although the pledge was signed by 500 scientists, including several nobel laureates, the offices of the Department of Biochemistry and the Division of Biology said they did not know of any K-State faculty members who had signed it.

"Playing five games (in a single match) and maybe more (during) tournaments is tough," Kinsey said.

"And it gets worse when you really don't feel like doing it and you know that you have to do your job," Call said.

Janet Murgia, Slattery's legislative assistant, said it is impressive that the Bank of Horton is competing nationally with larger banks like Chase Manhattan and Citibank.

"This is what small towns in Kansas ought to be looking for - innovative solutions (to economic development problems)," Murgia said.

Campus police plan to buy a new computer system designed to make catching parking offenders faster and easier. Employees checking parking lots will have hand-held computers with a record of all permit numbers on file at the police station.

When a number of a stolen permit is entered into the computer, the computer can write out a ticket.

The new system is expected to cost between $75,000 to $80,000, and will be put into use within the next two or three years, Beckom said. The cost covers eight hand-held computers and a mainframe system for the police station.

"The new system will make the ticketing process faster and cheaper - the computer will take care of permit billing, ticket history, and even writes out tickets," he said. "Instead of having our people tied up while looking through files for certain permit information, the computer can give it to us instantly."

Beckom said the computer system will pay for itself by freeing personnel from routine tasks within the ticketing process.

"Our outlook for the system estimates that between five and six years our actual cost savings will pay for the installation and equipment," he

"The rate of stolen permits has not grown. The stickers had their faults -some peeled off or wouldn't come off when the car owner wanted it to,"

"With this system, a student can transfer the permit from car to car, as long as it has been registered with us at the beginning of the semester," Beckom said. "We only get people abusing the privileges by giving it to people who haven't registered and paid for the permit."

Haitians revolt against new leader

By The Associated Press

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti Soldiers mutinied and civilian workers in three state-run companies went on strike Tuesday in what appeared to be a popular uprising against the vestiges of Lt. Gen. Henri Namphy's ousted regime.

Radio stations said the revolt spread after the newly installed government of Lt. Gen. Prosper Avril failed to expel army commanders who had been left in place.

Avril, who declared himself president Sunday after Namphy was appointed a new armed forces chief Tuesday and appealed for an end to the unrest.

He said the government was taking steps to satisfy "the most urgent demands of the members of the armed forces."

But reports of reprisal killings, demonstrations and military mutinies grew.

"I'm afraid we're on the eve of another insurrection," a government official said privately.

Soldiers around the country mutinied Monday and Tuesday and deposed in a military coup, removed their commanders, many of state-appointed managers, radio stawhom had served under the three preceding governments of Namphy, Leslie Manigat and Jean-Claude Duvalier.

> "We will chase out of the army all supporters of Namphy, Manigat and Duvalier," a policeman at a station in downtown Port-au-Prince, where soldiers removed their commander, said on independent Radio Inter. The army runs the police in Haiti.

Workers looted and tore apart by hand the house of Jean-Claude Souriac, head of the electricity company while two armed soldiers stood by, witnesses said. The flour mill manager also was removed, radio stations said, but the port authority manager still held his job late Tuesday.

The fate of the three managers was not known.

Radio stations said gunmen killed four people in apparent reprisal for the Sept. 11 massacre of 13 people during a Mass at a Roman Catholic church and other atrocities linked to Namphy' government.

Nine other people have been reported killed since Avril seized power. The coup was led by noncommissioned officers and lowerranking soldiers in Namphy's own presidential guard. Namphy was exiled to the Dominican Republic, which shares the island of Hispaniola with Haiti.

Soldiers who staged the coup had demanded of the military command that Avril be put in power, that the military be reorganized, and that

Local site to become job center

By Robert Short Campus Editor

President Reagan signed a bill Tuesday allowing an existing Manhattan site to become the newest location for a federally funded job core training center planned for fiscal 1989 - making it an "immediate project."

"For a community our size, (gaining this center) will have a very direct and measurable impact," said William Boyd, president of the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce.

The bill assured that "Kansas would be the No. 1 priority and that Manhattan would be the sight ... out of the $36 million that was approved for (federal) job core centers, approximately $6 million will be available for Manhattan, effective fiscal year 1989 — which means this would be an immediate project," Boyd said.

Chris Curtin, a developer and president of his own commercial brokerage firm, has worked with the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce during the past four years in putting together a package plan that included two existing buildings and a fiveacre plot south of Manhattan.

"In the state of Kansas, with agriculture as depressed as it is, we have a lot of kids who need re-training," Curtin said.

Kansas is currently one of six states that does not have a job core training center.

Boyd said Kansas was made a priority state because residents were often reluctant to "ship off" people to an out-of-state center for training. Typically, job core centers survey the current needs of the different employment areas within the location state, and then cater to those

The Chamber was interested in gaining the federally funded center because of its convenience, location in Kansas and the economic impact it will have on Manhattan, Boyd said.

"We are talking about 300 kids who have a little money in their pocket. We are talking about 100 professional employees (with) a pretty reasonable salary ... and a $2.5

House speaker: CIA used operatives in Nicaragua

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - House Speaker Jim Wright said Tuesday the Central Intelligence Agency has admitted using undercover operatives in Nicaragua to stir up public protest, hoping the leftist Sandinista government will overreact.

"We have received clear testimony from CIA people that they have deliberately done things to provoke an overreaction on the part of the government in Nicaragua," Wright, D-Texas, told reporters in answer to a question at his daily news conference.

In a subsequent interview, Wright said agency personnel, under questioning from members of Congress, said they had "sought to generate vigorous demonstrations. ... Agents of our government have assisted in organizing the kinds of antigovernment demonstrations that have been calculated to stimulate and provoke arrests."

CIA spokeswoman Sharon Basso declined to confirm or deny Wright's information. "We do brief Congress, but wouldn't discuss that publicly,"

Wright said he did not know whether a July 10 demonstration at Nandaime, south of Managua, that resulted in some 40 arrests, was a result of the U.S. provocations. The anti-Sandinista Contra rebels are asking for release of those prisoners as a gesture of good faith before resuming high-level peace talks with the government.

David Holliday, a spokesman for the Senate Intelligence Committee. said the committee held two days of hearings the week after the Nandaime unrest and was satisfied that there had been no U.S. government involvement in that particular Managua expelled the U.S. ambassador to Nicaragua, Richard Melton, and seven other diplomats on July 11, charging they were engaging in "state terrorism" and were trying to undermine the government.

Wright said it is clear that the CIA has been behind some of the public unrest that has led to government crackdowns on the opposition and worsened the atmosphere for faltering peace discussions between the

"It has been foolish of the Sandinistas to respond to those provocations," Wright said, referring to the shutting down of opposition media outlets such as the newspaper La Prensa and Radio Catolica, a church-run radio station.

"I've made that unmistakably clear to people in Nicaragua. They have to demonstrate their commitment to the democratization they have announced" in earlier peace agreements, he said.

But Wright also condemned the U.S. interference. "I do not believe it is the proper role of our government to try to provoke riots ... or deliberately to try to antagonize governing officials into foolish overreactions,

The two sides broke off talks on Monday in Guatemala City after failing to agree on a new site for resuming peace negotiations, and Nicaraguan President Daniel Ortega accused the rebels of seeking to avoid negotiations in hopes of receiving new U.S. military aid.

A reporter also heard gunfire in downtown Rangoon late Tuesday, one day after troops killed more than 100 antigovernment demonstrators.

In all, more than 200 people have been reported killed since Saw Maung seized power Sunday from Maung Maung, Burma's first civlian leader in 26 years.

Top opposition leaders issued a statement Tuesday calling for talks with Saw Maung to resolve the country's political and economic crisis and criticizing the military's bloody crackdown

Farmland to pay cooperatives

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - For the first time since 1984, Farmland Industries Inc. will pay dividends to its member cooperatives, President James Rainey announced Tuesday.

The company has not yet announced financial results for the fiscal year ending Aug. 31, but Rainey said earnings exceeded its goals by $19 million. The dividends paid to member co-ops, which in most cases pass them along to farmers, will be based on the amount of supplies purchased from Farmland.

The announcement came at a teleconference to discuss changes in Farmland's operations and the proposed merger with two Minnesota cooperatives, Land O'Lakes Inc. and CENEX.

The merger was proposed in 1985, but talks stopped after Farmland fell into financial difficulties, since reversed. It earned $55 million in fiscal 1987, and the merger talks that resumed in July culminated in signing of a letter of intent the following

The proposed merger would create the nation's largest cooperative, with assets of $9 billion.

It was also announced Tuesday that member cooperatives will soon receive commitment agreements requiring them to buy fuel, fertilizer and other products exclusively from Farmland.

Kansas considers new prisons

TOPEKA — A handful of legislators took a first glance at a proposal calling for the construction of two new state prisons at an estimated cost $107.8 million — a plan expected to set up a heated debate during the 1989 Legislature.

Corrections Secretary Roger Endell presented the plan to the Joint Committee on State Building Construction, the first legislative committee to see it. He also forwarded it to Gov. Mike Hayden and other lawmakers, along with a report his agency will use to justify the request.

Also, 12 communities submitted proposals under which they hope to become prison sites. Endell said his agency plans to set up a screening committee to review them. The cities had until Tuesday to send the department their plans.

Endell acknowleged that cost is likely to be the largest obstacle to gaining approval of his plans from the Legislature when it convenes in January. "It's expensive," Endell told the committee. "I don't know of any meaningful alternatives."

Lawmakers who have seen the plan have expressed doubts about its chances of passing.

"I think it'd be fair that it would be difficult to convince some of them," said the committee's vice chairman, Rep. Phil Kline, R-Overland Park. "I know some who are convinced we don't need to build any prisons and some who will do whatever is considered necessary. But it's the vast group in the middle about which I wouldn't be prepared to guess."

Corrections officials will present the plan Wednesday to the Special Committee on Ways and Means. In addition, Endell said they will discuss it before U.S. District Judge Richard Rogers on Sept. 29.

About three weeks ago, Rogers ordered the state to remove 200 inmates from the Kansas State Penitentiary in Lansing by the end of the year because of overcrowding there. The order came after the state met Rogers' April order to remove nearly 400 inmates from the penitentiary by September.

In addition, Rogers has agreed to hear arguments starting Oct, 24 from inmates at the Kansas State Industrial Reformatory and the Kansas Correctional Institution at Lansing, who are seeking similar relief.

Mall to feature new restaurant, bar

By Melissa Paul Collegian Reporter

After almost a year, Manhattan their search for a full-service restaurant to anchor the mall's food court.

Carlos O'Kelley's, a Wichitabased chain, is expected to open Jan. 10. By having entrances into the restaurant from both inside and outside of the mall, its hours can extend past the regular mall hours.

Gil Kelley, owner of the restaurant, said it will be a full-service restaurant with a full-line bar. It will have a seating capacity of 260, including a patio dining area.

Christopher Heavey, general manager for Town Center, said the mall is allowed to have alcohol on city property because the city has a 99-year lease on the property which gives it the privileges of private ownership.

Heavey said added security measures will take place to ensure that no problems occur with the presence of alcohol on the premises.

The restaurant is expected to be open from 11 a.m. to 11 p.m. Sunday through Thursday, and 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. Friday and Saturday.

Heavey said he expects Carlos O'Kelley's to be one of the mall's major attractions.

"We expect Carlos O'Kelley's to Town Center officials have ended really create evening traffic," he said. In addition to the restaurant, Zales jewelers, Jeans West and Main Street Revival are expected to open in Town Center within the next few

> Two new stores opened recently in the mall - World Bazaar, an import specialty store, and Taylor's Shoes.

> Dave Taylor, owner of Taylor's Shoes, said he chose to move to the mall from Aggieville because the clothing stores in Town Center draw a larger crowd interested in shoes than the businesses in Aggieville.

Town Center will celebrate its one year anniversary with events scheduled from Oct. 22 through 29. The grand finale on Oct. 29 will include a Monster Bash with performances by three to five bands. A fireworks display that evening will conclude the

3 businesses to open stores Town Center to add parking

By Scott Berg Collegian Reporter

This spring the Hunter-Lundberg site just west of Manhattan Milling Co. will become an addition to the Manhattan Town Center's parking

The lot's construction, estimated to cost about $500,000, will be paid for by the mall's developer, Forest City Development, of Cleveland, Ohio.

"I think it will come in considerably less than that, but it was a preliminary estimate made without benefit of plans and any details at the time. It truly was a rough estimate at that point and time," said Jerry Petty, deputy director of Manhattan Public

The estimate includes about $200,000 for the actual construction, and $300,000 for design and consultant fees, site preparations, cost of the land and interest on the borrowed

Having the developer pay for all of the lot's cost would not be normal in this type of situation; however, an agreement between the City of Manhattan and Forest City officials stated that the developer would pay all costs incurred in the addition, Petty said. Construction on the lot should begin late this fall or early spring. It is expected to be completed by summer.

The lot's extension will be public parking restricted to mall patrons.

The construction of the new lot is not related to any mall development or the possible construction of a Sears addition to the mall, said Jim Pearson, Manhattan's assistant city manager.

Should a third anchor store be added, the grassy areas around the mall will be made into parking spaces, he said.

Forest City, Pearson said, sees the parking addition as a way to attract additional businesses to the mall.

The addition, which will add 109 spaces, will be located on the mall's south end. Parts of Second and Pierre streets, including their intersection, will be replaced by the expansion. It will expand from west of Manhattan Milling Co. to the edge of the viaduct, which will go over the corner of the lot, Petty said.

"Once it's constructed, you'll never (be able to) tell it wasn't built that way in the first place," Petty said.

Holton renovation meeting deadline

By The Collegian Staff

The renovation of Holton Hall is on schedule, according to Skyler Harper, assistant University architect in facilities planning.

"At this point, 95 percent of the demolition is completed," Harper

Most of the renovation has consisted of making the building handicapped accessible and removing interior walls to make the building more efficient, Harper said.

Due to the construction, the offices that were located in Holton Hall have been moved to various buildings.

Greek Affairs is presently located in the Union 106 next to the candy counter, a room that was previously used as a coat closet. "It was inconvenient to move," said Barb Robel, adviser for Greek Affairs. "We are in a space one third the size of our old office, but we are more visible now.'

The Dean of Student Life's office was relocated to Room 1 in the basement of Anderson Hall.

Acquisitions may provide best solution

ongress should help solve savings and loan crisis

"I hope this isn't a done deal. If the regulator is using federal assistance monies to establish speculative entities, the industry as a whole can be expected to take this as a green light to again reach for the riskier operations.'

- House Banking Committee Chairman Fernand St Germain on the Bass Group's agreement to acquire the nation's largest insolvent thrift.

ot long ago you may not have cared where you deposited your savings, since your deposits are likely to be insured up to $100,000 by one of the federal insurance agencies. But you had better care now in the wave of new developments in the savings and loan industry.

Hurricane Gilbert might have passed over Texas, but another storm is originating there which might shake the nations' savings and loan industry. As of the beginning of this year, 503 of the nation's 3,178 savings and loans, or thrift institutions, were insolvent their liabilities exceeded their assets. More than half of these sick savings and loans are based in Texas.

The illiquidity and insolvency faced by thrifts in Texas is not limited to that state, but is a national issue. The latest case came to light a couple of weeks ago when the Bass Group, a Texas-based firm, agreed to acquire the nation's largest insolvent thrift, American Corp's American Savings and Loan, with $2 billion guaranteed in federal assistance.

Take my word or ask any financial analyst and you will hear the same story behind the current difficulties of thrifts. As you might already know, the interest rates were on the rise in the late 1960s and 1970s. The thrifts could remain competitive by offering higher interest rates than before. But their efforts to do so were restrained because of three significant reasons.

First, interest rates paid by thrifts were subject to a ceiling, that is thrifts could not pay interest over a certain limit. It was not until the Depository Institutions Deregulation and Monetary Control Act of 1980 that such ceilings were removed.

Second, even if such ceilings are assumed to be non-existent during the period under consideration, it is doubtful that thrifts could have balanced their high interest payments with their low fixed revenue from mortgage loans. Such loans have usually consisted of more than half of the assets of savings and loan associations. Savings and loans have devised adjustable rate mortgages in which popular, since it depletes the gain of borrow-

The insurance arm of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, which is called the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation, insures the depositors accounts, as I mentioned earlier. Nowadays, the bank board is more active in sponsoring acquisitions of sick thrifts by healthy thrifts, banks, entrepreneurs or other acquirers. It is also active in supporting such acquisitions with FSLIC insurance money. The Sept. 12 issue of the Wall Street Journal reported that home board predicted that the bank board would close or merge 48 more insolvent institutions before the end of its fiscal year on Sept. 30. For the year, it has closed or merged 102 thrifts.

FSLIC has evidently figured out that the best way to solve the crisis is to sponsor mergers of thrifts that show some promise of success and dissolve those without any hope. Of course, FSLIC is headed the right way since total write-off of sick thrifts would be disastrous for the insurance agency and the savings and loan industry. It would also, to some extent, shake the confidence of depositors, depending upon how soon FSLIC makes the money in the accounts available to the depositors.

FSLIC finances the mergers through insurance premiums from member banks, assess-> he notes carry the full faith and credit of the federal government. But Congress is still reluctant to put a full government guarantee behind notes issued by FSLIC, which recently made such a request but withdrew it when no chance of success was visible.

The bank board is facing two challenges. One is to bring the thrift industry back to its feet. The second is to convince Congress to do what is right. I don't see any reason why Congress should block the efforts of FSLIC. especially since its own General Accounting Office has said that FSLIC cannot rescue the savings and loan industry without Congress'

Arguments on Capitol Hill and statements like the one cited at the beginning of this column might signal a red light to the depositors. And, they may result in a run on $932 billion thrift deposits. By creating the bank board and its FSLIC branch, the Congress tried to enhance depositors' confidence in thrift institutions. By not backing the timely and appropriate actions of these regulators, it is negating what it had intended to attain.

SGA should sponsor textbook exchange

Who in the world would pay up to $17 for a paperback or $50 for a hardcover book, just read part of it, keep it for a few months, and end up selling it back to a store for less than half its original value?

Only a college student.

Textbook sellers offer numerous justifications for their high prices and low refunds. Maybe they are right. But there must be a cheaper way to buy and sell books.

A local company known as "Textbook Savers" has found one. At $1.25 per book, students can list textbooks they wish to sell at their own asking price. A book with the listings costs $5. If a textbook sells, the students collect all the money.

Nonetheless, there is even a better way. A number of student governments have started up textbook clearinghouses on their

MANAGING EDITOR...

The Fort Hays State University student government set up one such clearinghouse. At the end of every semester, tables are set up in the student union. Students leave their books and asking prices there. At the beginning of the next semester, the books are sold and the students collect their money.

This clearinghouse for textbooks has many advantages. It cuts out the middleman and puts the money where it should be - in the pockets of students. This sort of open market approach also helps bring prices down. Once Fort Hays began to offer its clearinghouse program, its union bookstore suddenly began to offer

It would be nice if the K-State Student Governing Association could offer such a program. Given the low start-up costs of the program and the recent increase in allocations for the SGA, one would think it's time.

Foxes abused

Editor,

Last Friday night, at about 1:30 a.m., a friend and I were walking across campus when we spotted three foxes. It was a neat experience to witness such graceful creatures making their home right on our campus.

Unfortunately, unappreciative occupants of a light-colored, four-wheel-drive truck saw them too. They yelled threatening comments toward one of the animals and began chasing the poor thing with their truck! What's the point, guys? Can't you just see a small creature without trying to run it over? If I had been closer, I would have taken the tag number of the truck and reported you.

We are really lucky to have such wildlife in our own back yard. I'm sure many people would agree that the foxes weren't placed here for you to play with.

Ignored minority

In the society we live in, there are many cases of discrimination. We read about it daily, see it constantly, and unfortunately, many of us participate in it in some way. Practically every minority is a victim, but almost none so often and so unnoticed as the one I am a member of and am writing about. I am what the majority of you would, with much prejudice, call a "leftie."

This is my first semester at K-State. I am a transfer student from a top-notch JUCO in Johnson County where my minority group was dealt with quite well. The college had full tables in most classrooms rather than chairs with small desk tops attached to the far right side of them. Even in the rooms with desks, there were always a couple of optional desks that were made for people like myself.

Letters

I was astonished one day as I searched for a new backpack in the bookstore to find a stack of left-handed spiral notebooks. If you "normal" people do not know what it is like to be one of us, just try turning your spiral notebook upside down and writing a few lines. Now take one of those goopy Eraser-mate pens and write a few lines going right to left rather then left to right. If your hand turned blue, you did it correctly.

After completing three full weeks at K-State, I have yet to see any device that was solely intended for the use of left-handed people. I suppose I could be overlooking a secret underground "leftie" store or something along those lines, and if I am, by all means, let me know. I would be delighted to

Support upsetting

I agree with Tom Perrin, Collegian sports columnist. At least some of us still have hope for our football team. My question is: "Where is our winning spirit for our football team?"

During our first home game against Iowa, its side was filled with fans before kick-off and as I continued to glance at our side, I asked,

"Where are our fans?" I'm only a freshman and I'm still used to the high school games where the fans gather before kick-off. I agree our team does not have the best record, but one of the many reasons is our lack of support. I didn't see the ICAT students at the first game and if, by any chance, they were actually there, I definitely didn't hear them. I hate to see the student section on the side opposite the K-State players. I think it would be so much better for the students to be sitting behind the team, cheering

The articles I have read suggest that our coaches have no hope. I have even heard football players say that at least Perrin is still saying "We can win at football."

Even the faculty crack jokes in class about our team. What kind of backbone support are we? No matter our record is the way it is. Students are even saying we should cut the football program out and use the money for something else. We're quitting before we've even

It is also really a shame when the football players have to turn around and wave their hands, trying to get the crowd to give some

To the football players: I support you and I'll be at every game possible, cheering you on to victory no matter what!

Renovation plan could save money

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — The state will save about $14 million - more than three-quarters of the total cost — on a proposed renovation of the Kansas Correctional Institution at Lansing, under plans a delighted legislative committee endorsed Tuesday.

Corrections Secretary Roger Endell told legislators that the savings can be made because of the state Department of Corrections now plans to house only minimum-security inmates at the prison and can borrow a design from another proposed institution.

Under the plans, KCIL would house minimum-security men, instead of all classifications of women. In addition, the prison's layout would be changed drastically. The changes would cost about $4 million.

"We've looked for a less expensive approach to housing," Endell told the Legislature's Joint Committee on State Building Construction. "We'd like to proceed immediately."

The committee voted unanimously to allow the department to proceed with its plans. It's vice chairman, Rep. Phil Kline, R-Overland Park, had enthusiastic praise for Endell and his agency.

"We felt all along there had to be a better way," Kline said. "We're glad you found it."

The 70-year-old prison is now part of a prison overcrowding lawsuit brought against the state by inmates. Its buildings are designed to hold 158 prisoners but hold about two dozen more than

The 1986 Legislature approved plans for a seven-year renovation project that would cost $16.4 million and increase the prison's capacity to 240 beds. However, lawmakers put the project on hold last year, after Endell told them that project architects had underestimated costs associated with developing the prison site by about $2 million.

The Legislature already had appropriated $4.2 million for the project. Corrections officials said the project can be completed under the new plans for that "They were designed for women," Roger Werholtz, a deputy corrections secretary, said of the old plans. "They were designed for multiple-security."

Earlier this year, the department began moving most of the female inmates from KCIL to the Kansas Correctional-Vocational Training Center in Topeka. Agency officials said the move was designed to improve conditions and programs for the women.

Now, plans call for KCIL to house many of the minimumsecurity inmates currently at the nearby Kansas State Penitentiary.

Endell said the department would use a design similar to one for two, 200-bed housing buildings at a proposed work center in

Durland III in University's future

By Jenny Reschke Collegian Reporter

The construction of Durland Hall's third phase is definitely in the University's future, but ranks 20th on the University's building priority

"This doesn't mean it won't move on this list, but actually it is listed after Farrell Library," said Vince Cool, associate director of the Office of Facilities Planning.

In the proposed sequence of major development projects, Durland's same size as Durland I and II, but third phase also follows the Throckmorton plant science addition and the second phase of the Chemistry/ Biochemistry complex.

Cool said the Throckmorton addition should be under construction within one year.

Durland's first and second phases, built in 1976 and 1983, are named after Dean Emeritus M.A. Durland. The proposed third addition will add onto the west side of Durland's existing atrium, Cool said.

Durland III would be about the could be a two-, three- or four-story project, he said.

The space would accommodate basically the rest of the college, including the Department of Agricultural Engineering, with the exception of the nuclear engineering department facilities in Ward Hall," said Donald Rathbone, dean of the College of Engineering.

The plot for the proposed structure was originally designed with space allowed for Durland III to coordinate with Durland I and II, he said. But. because of the many other projects on the building priority list, the precise date of construction is not known.

"I'm not sure how far away it (the date of construction) is. It's very difficult to anticipate this," Rathbone

He did predict that it would occur in the middle of the 1990s.

The educational building fund, which is determined by property tax assessments, would fund the project in the same manner that it funds other campus buildings, Cool said.

Visitors provided chance to observe Konza Prairie

By Sarah Kobs Collegian Reporter

Konza Prairie officials are lifting their restricted-access ban on the prairie from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Saturday for Visitors' Day.

"On Visitors' Day our strategy is to provide a variety of activities so people can see the prairie and what goes on," said J. L. Zimmerman, professor of biology and coordinator of Konza Prairie Visitors' Day.

Since 1971, the 8,616 acres of grassland have been used for educational research. Long-term research tions will be made in the headquarat the prairie has centered on plant species composition, soil characteristics, plant production and changing insect, bird and mammal populations.

'Visitors can explore the prairie via walking tours with knowledgeable guides or strike out on their own on the new 21/4 -mile, self-guided hiking trail," he said.

Displays on current ecological research being conducted on the prairie will be in the barn and lab throughout the day. Slide presentaters building every half hour from 9 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. The slide show will describe the habitats within the prairie, the experimental management plan and ongoing research.

Haywagon rides will be provided for those who wish to see the area in which the wild bison graze. The rides will begin at 8:30 a.m. and depart every half hour until 2:15 p.m. The ride will last about 11/2 hours, Zimmerman said.

Ted Barkley, coordinator of Konza Prairie, is hoping to have about 1,500 visitors Saturday.

"This is public relations for Konza Prairie because there are a lot of people interested in what goes on here.

"This is the only time the public has access to the entire grassland. There will be ongoing research and K-State scientists will be there to answer questions," Barkley said.

Elmer Finck, administrative assistant for Konza Prairie, said the prairie is "essentially in good shape."

Although the tallgrass is shorter than usual due to the lack of moisture, there have been no drastic effects on the prairie due to the drought, Finck said.

"The prairie has been dry before; it is a given of nature," Finck said. "The nation's drought hasn't had an effect on the prairie."

Research has been able to continue as normal despite the weather, Finck said. Because weather conditions vary from year to year, researchers must be adaptable to the condition of the prairie.

Konza Prairie headquarters are located six miles south of Manhattan on Riley County 901 or five miles northeast of Interstate 70 at exit 307.

Slattery tails to make tax promise

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA - Democratic U.S. Rep. Jim Slattery declined Tuesday to sign a Republican-inspired "Taxpayer's Protection Pledge" offered by his GOP opponent in the November election, calling it "clearly a cheap political stunt."

Phil Meinhardt, Slattery's challenger in the 2nd District of northeast Kansas, met the congressman as he prepared to tour the Veterans Administration Medical Center here.

Meinhardt had a large card with the pledge written on it and asked

> Collegian Classifieds Where K-State Shops

Slattery to sign it.

The pledge commits signers not to vote for any tax increases during their term in office.

"I don't believe Sen. (Nancy) Kassebaum or Sen. (Bob) Dole have signed this pledge or would sign this pledge," Slattery said. "It's irresponsible. What will we do if this country faces a serious emergency like the $50 billion possible baleout the savings and loan industry may need? "I'm not going to make irresponsible promises. I do not favor raising taxes on working, middle income people in this country. I never have and I don't plan to start now." Meinhardt told Slattery he thought his visit to Topeka was "an excellent opportunity for you to sign the Taxpayer's Protection Pledge, assuring the people of northeast Kansas that regardless of which of us is elected, their vote in Congress will be cast against a tax increase."

Ken Murphy, Slattery's press secretary, said a budget deficit reduction conference Slattery held for constituents earlier this year showed that voters in the district favor a combination of revenue increases and further budget cuts as the best way to reduce the deficit.

Vince Berry, senior in finance and economics, and Sheryl King, freshman in English and psychology, stand with their personalized cars, INNOCNT and TROUBLE, at the River Pond Area of Tuttle Creek Reservoir.

Let's get personalized

'Karen Folger, tresnman in business, sits in her car BEANBAG, a nickname that Folger received as a CB handle while on a road trip with her family.

The names of things are very important to just exactly what that something is and how we are to think of it.

It has been a trend throughout history for people to label the inanimate objects around them with personal names which explain how they feel about the object and how they feel about themselves.

For example, there was a sword named Excalibur, a hammer named Mjolnir, a shotgun named Bessie, and a mule named Old

There is one area of objects, however, which has prompted people to become fanatical about names.

Vehicles of transportation.

There was a ship named Titanic, a boat named Minnow, a plane named The Spirit of St. Louis, and a horse named Silver. People have been crazy about naming the things that get them to and from work, home or anywhere, for that matter. It probably has something to do with the gratitude we have for not having to get around on our own two feet.

This naming doesn't always have something to do with gratitude. There was a car named the Deathmobile and another one named Christine - but that's another story.

In today's world, we don't usually carry swords, and we rarely rely on a horse to get us around. And, in the Manhattan area, especially, we don't sail a ship down to Aggieville. We do, however, like our cars.

In 1980, the state of Kansas started its personalized license plate program due to public demand and to get in sync with other states that were already producing them, said Eileen King, Riley County treasurer.

"For $42 you get seven letters and/or dency to cause a lot of trouble."

motto," King said. "Nothing nasty, though." People have a right to their personalized plates for a five- year series, she said. The present series began in 1985, ending in 1990. Car owners who have personalized tags must renew them every five years, King said, adding that they do get first option on their old tag before the next series begins. "You can put almost anything on your tag, but unappropriate or hidden meanings go in front of a kind of censor board in Topeka," she said. "We might flag the proposed tag if we feel it's too suggestive."

King mentioned several plates that she considers on the borderline of being suggestive: 4PLAY, IB6UB9, URAQT, RUREDE, King said there are about 2,000 personalized tags in the Riley County area, and 35 of those can be found in the Manhattan area.

K-State students seem to have taken to the vanity plate craze fairly well, making their cars statements - instead of just cars.

Vince Berry, senior in finance and economics, has a 1986 black Trans Am with a license plate reading INNOCNT.

"It's a study in contrast," Berry said. "Dark car, dark windows - it describes me. I'm kinda wild and I'm kind of a nice guy."

"Most people just look at the tag and say 'Yeah, right," he said. "It gets a person's attention sometimes."

Sheryl King, freshman in English and psychology, has a 1983 Dodge Omni with a license plate that reads TROUBLE.

"My mom did it because I wanted a plate for Christmas," she said. "I also have a ten-ment about themselves, make a statement about the car. There are several personalized license plates on K-Staters' cars, but it's the ones with the obnoxious messages that seem to stick in one's mind.

Charlie Bell, a senior in engineering, has a car that has a little modification which seems to make his personalized plate — 2LOUD4U somehow appropriate.

Imagine $8,000 worth of stereo system in a 1988 formula Firebird.

"I get a lot of disbelievers," Bell said. "They'll say 'No way is it too loud for me, dude.' So I just sit them in the car, turn up the bass and blow the fenders right off them. It vibrates so hard that you can't speak."

When a jet takes off, it makes 115 to 122 decibels worth of sound, he said. His sound system puts out 132 to 136 decibels.

His system consists of 6 power amplifiers with 1,440 watts.

"It's surprising I haven't broken a window," he said. "My system has gotten progressively insaner as it has gone along."

There is one drawback to having a personalized license plate - sometimes they get stolen, King said.

"If someone steals your tag, you can get a new one free of charge, but it can't say exactly what it said before," King said. "It takes two to three months to either get one or have it replaced. The risk of it getting stolen isn't that bad, but people should be aware that it happens."

All the personalized tags for Kansas are made at Center Industries in Wichita.

Story by Steve Walker

Above is a sample of a few tags found in the Manhattan area. About 2,000 personalized tags are registered in the Riley County area. Every five years personalized tags must be renewed. The present series began in 1985 and ends in 1990.

Market investment challenge to begin

By Stacy Sweazy Collegian Reporter

Up for grabs is more than $200,000 in cash and prizes.

And contending for it are thousands of college students who will begin "play" in the stock market Nov. 1.

The First Annual AT&T Collegiate Investment Challenge is a competition open to college students across the country. For an entry fee of $49.95, students can take control of $500,000 brokerage accounts to buy and sell real stocks in an effort to maximize the value of their portfolios.

"Across the country, every state is signed up for the competition and we're very excited about that," said Lisa Nollet, director of marketing for the Challenge.

Fort Hays State University, Pittsburg State University, the University of Kansas, Washburn University, Wichita State University and K-State are the participating Kansas schools.

The event is unique, she said, because a full service brokerage others. firm will handle all of the trading activity and provide human assistance throughout the event.

The Finance Club and Financial Management Association are sponsoring the challenge. The information and packets are available from these groups, said Kathleen Oldfather, instructor in finance.

By dialing a toll-free 800 line, participants can start investing with brokers at a fully-automated trading desk. Trades are based on up-tothe-minute stock quotes beamed by satellite from the exchanges in New

"We have been taking literally thousands of phone calls until 11 o'clock at night," Nollet said.

Players will be mailed a personal, three-page account statement and newsletter at the end of each month. The statement will provide an account summary, a record of all their transactions, a complete listing of portfolio holdings, and a current valuation of their account. A rankings section will show how

"I think it's a great opportunity for students to get the experience without putting their own money on the line," said Janet Lee, president of the Finance Club.

The top students at each college will receive an engraved plaque and a certificate listing them as a recordholder at their college. Stu-

"Students who are able to amass $500,000 will be given awards and their names will be kept on a roster of the Millionaires' Club. It is pheeach participant fared against nomenal for a student to achieve this," Nollet said.

The top 100 performers each month will receive athletic shoes from Reebok and a Benetton wrist watch by Bulova.

The top 10 players will be flown with guests to New York City and honored at an awards ceremony where they will each receive a cash prize of $25,000. While there, they will be taken on a tour of the New York Stock Exchange, attend a Broadway show, and be interviewed on national television. In addition, they will each receive a week-long trip to the Bahamas.

"If you win, you get a 39,000 percent return on your money," Nollet said.

The event is only open to college students enrolled at two-year and four-year accredited colleges and universities. Of the 12 million college students eligible to compete, the competition is limited to the first 25,000 who register.

Shuttle bolt probe may lead to charges

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - NASA's inspector general said Tuesday he expects more indictments charging aerospace manufacturers with certifying falsely that bolts used on the space shuttles had been properly tested.

Bill Colvin said he had been assured by engineers that there are no defective bolts in critical areas on the shuttle Discovery, which is to be launched Sept. 29 from the Kennedy Space Center in Florida.

"We are looking at false certification," he said. "That does not necessarily mean they are defective."

The Los Angeles Times quoted Darrell Lee, president of Lee Aerospace Products of Simi Valley, Calif., as saying his company is one of many under investigation.

Colvin said it would not be appropriate for him to discuss Lee Aerospace. No charges have been filed against the firm.

"At this point in time our interest is in fasteners," Colvin said. "I would expect more indictments."

Ron Bledsoe, chief of the quality engineering division at the Marshall Space Flight Center in Huntsville, Ala., said the false certifications were uncovered during an audit in February and March.

"There are some of Lee Aerospace's bolts on the shuttle, we know that," he said. "We've actually gone in and evaluated where these bolts were and in any critical application, we conducted extensive stress analysis and determined there was no safety issue."

Bledsoe said the shuttle's right booster contains 614 Lee bolts and the left booster has 595 and that Lee bolts account for 60 percent of the 2,000 bolts inside the rockets.

"Even with those bolts that were in there, I couldn't say we would have a problem with them," Bledsoe said. 'But they just didn't meet all the requirement we have. We want to assure ourselves all bases are

Arthur O. Sammons of Canoga Park, Calif., was indicted Sept. 9 by a federal grand jury in Birmingham, Ala., on 26 counts of making false statements to NASA and 17 counts of mail fraud involving shuttle bolts made by Lawrence Engineering and Supply of Burbank, Calif.

In the Sammons case, federal authorities said the cost of identifying and removing the suspect bolts was $1 million, an estimate that Colvin called conservative.

Bunker: 'right man for the job'

Coach wants to deliver 'Cats from Big 8 cellar

By Tom Morris Sports Editor

Let's face it: K-State's golf team is in trouble.

You may notice the results from the Kansas State Invitational played Monday and Tuesday at the Manhattan Country Club, see that the Wildcats won the tournament by 43 strokes, and assume the team is off to a blazing start.

Results can be deceiving.

It would have been a tremendous upset if one of the four NAIA schools competing in the tournament had defeated K-State. It would have been nothing short of a major surprise if the Wildcats hadn't captured the top seven spots in the medalist competition — especially on their home course.

You see, K-State has finished last in the Big Eight Conference tournament the past nine seasons. The last time the 'Cats placed out of the cellar was in 1977 at Lawrence when they placed sixth. The best finish ever for K-State at the conference meet was third in 1956 and 1965.

We're talking serious drought

But newly named coach Russ Bunker has a plan. He's watched the demise of K-State's golf team for the past eight years while he worked as floor manager at Woody's Men's Shop. And if Bunker has his way, the 'Cats will crack the top four in the Big Eight.

"I've been blessed with good players, it's just that their potential hasn't been brought out yet," Bunk-

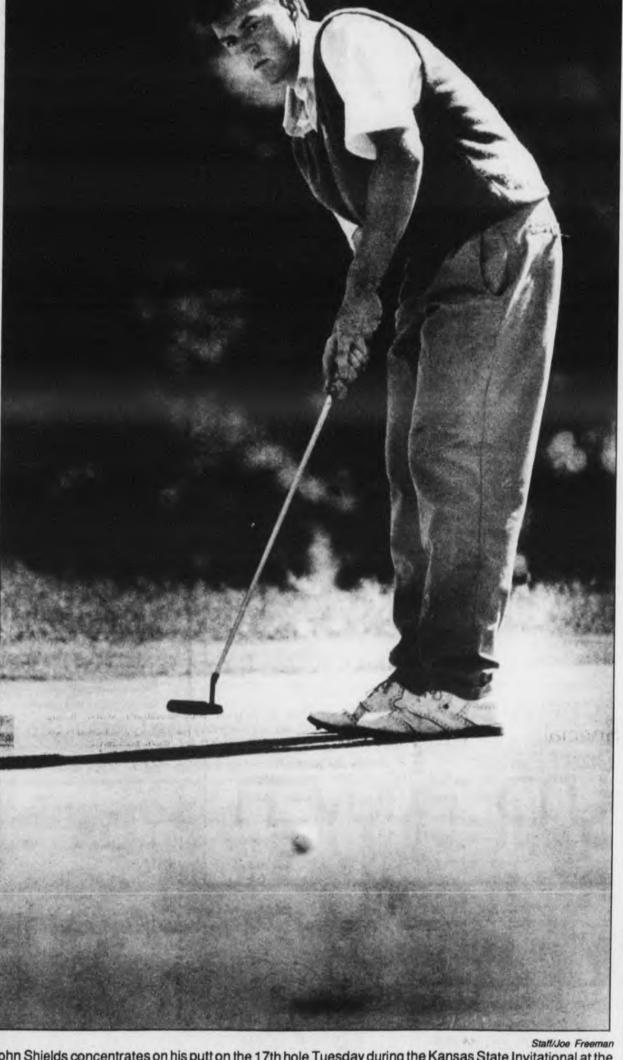

For K-State to compete on the national level, the 'Cats must play a tougher schedule and see an increase in their budget, Bunker

"We can't keep going to these small tournaments. We need to play in places like Colorado, Florida and California," Bunker said. "If I was to recruit the No. 1 high school player in the country, and I told him our schedule, he would laugh at

As for the monetary problems, Bunker sings the same budget blues as other non-revenue sport coaches. ■ See GOLF, Page 14

New golf coach Russ Bunker looks on from a cart during Tuesday's tournament. The Wildcats finished first in the tourney.

John Shields concentrates on his putt on the 17th hole Tuesday during the Kansas State Invitational at the Manhattan Country Club. Shields finished second individually during the two-day tournament.

Wildcats improve to 8-0

By Melissa Payne Sports Writer

Question: What do you get when you pit a 7-0 volleyball team against a second-year Division I program with a 1-5 record?

Answer: A 47-minute, three-game

K-State's volleyball team dumped the University of Missouri-Kansas City 15-3, 15-5, 15-2 Tuesday night in Ahearn Field House, and in the process the Wildcats got off to their best start in school history.

"I thought that even though we had big leads in each game, we maintained the intensity level which is critical for our advancement as a team," coach Scott Nelson said.

Despite the easy win, the second this season K-State has had against the Kangaroos, Nelson said UMKC has improved since joining the major-college ranks last year.

"Last year they had trouble ... but our first match in UMKC this year was a little bit closer," Nelson said. UMKC was also without the service of its top setter, Kala Dahnke, who is lost for the season with a broken foot.

"That throws your offense off, and then it is real complicated to score points or stop your opponents from scoring," Nelson said.

As for K-State, Mary Kinsey is now just nine service aces away from a career record. The 5-foot-10 senior outside hitter had three aces last night against the Kangaroos. The K-State career record is 167, set by Kristi Jacquart from 1984-87.

Junior outside hitter Lynda Harshbargar is well on her way to breaking the single-season service ace record. Harshbarger has 35 after just nine games. The record was set last season by Jacquart with 87. The 'Cats got a lift from freshman

Rhonda Hughes. She led K-State with 10 kills and had a hitting percentage of .421. Middle hitter Valerie Kastens registered seven kills and hit .455 for the Wildcats. K-State's next action is scheduled for Friday and Saturday when the 'Cats will play in the University of Nebraska Invitational at Lincoln.

Included in the field are the host Cornhuskers and the University of Wyoming. Both are nationally ranked.

"When you play good opponents, basically it's a measuring stick on where your program is at," Nelson said. "The tournament will tell us exactly where our program is at."

In Italy, where he plays for Caserta

In Indianapolis, where he played in the Pan Am Games for Brazil last year, Oscar shot and shot and shot -45 points for the game, 36 in the second half - until the bewildered Americans surrendered the gold.

In Seoul, he unpacked his jumper in time to stick 36 against Canada, then came alive for 45 against China. Now, the 6-foot-8 Oscar — his full name is a much more unwieldy Oscar Daniel Bezerra Schmidt - is being cast as the spoiler again in a remake of "Damn Yankees."

"Oscar is an outstanding shooter," said U.S. coach John Thompson, who hands out praise about as often as he invites reporters home to dinner.

But if you think Thompson is playing it close to the vest, listen to Oscar's coach, Ari Vidal.

Asked to compare the U.S. national team that the Brazilians upset with the squad Thompson brought in tow, Vidal replied through an interpreter, "It is impossible. I have only seen them one time."

MOT PERRIN Sports Columnist

Talk about some swell timing. Just about the time in the semester when I actually have to do a little studying, the Olympics start up.

Normally, I would have a tough time choosing between watching the Home Shopping Network and hitting the books. But, since it's the Olympics, and I hate studying more than words can describe, I am suddenly captivated by sports such as water polo and greco-roman wrestling.

Admittedly, the Olympics have been a great excuse for me to waste time the past few days. And with much, much more to come in the next week and a half, I'll waste plenty of time.

A few things about the Olympics, however, have bothered me. The biggest of these things happened on Monday with the overdone story of how American diver Greg Louganis overcame hitting his head on the springboard during preliminaries and came back to win the gold medal.

I'm happy for Louganis, don't get me wrong, and I'm sure it took a lot of courage for him to come back. But when it comes right down to it, he wasn't hurt that badly. Four stitches isn't that big of deal.

Yet it seems like every time Bryant Gumbel opened his mouth Monday night, it was to describe the clip of Louganis hitting his head. After seeing it for the eighth time, some of the impact was lost.

Louganis' accident is a prime example of how the media can manubeware.

I'd also love to know how U.S. boxer Anthony Hembrick managed to miss his opening bout and lose his chance to compete in the Games. Hembrick's coach supposedly found the schedule confusing and didn't get Hembrick to the arena on time as a result. Weak, very weak, coach.

And talk about confusing, has anyone been able to get a handle on how former K-Stater Mitch Richmond is doing for the Olympic basketball team? Richmond, named a starter at the outset of the Games by coach John Thompson, has scored just five points in two games.

Not until Tuesday night's key game against Brazil did NBC start showing enough of the U.S. basketball games so people could get a handle on the team.

My final complaint is in regard to McDonald's, and their deluge of advertising during the Olympics.

facture a story. Let the viewer Granted, it's worked on me, because I stopped at Mickey D's twice on my way back from Kansas City last Sunday because I wanted some "When the U.S. wins, you win" game pieces.

Still, equating fast food with Olympic success is a problem for me. With all the success the Olympics has given to McDonald's, I wonder why perennial underdog Burger King doesn't try to capitalize as well.

Based on the simple equation free food equals more customers, why doesn't Burger King start a "When the Eastern Bloc wins, you win" promotion.

With the prospect of a free Whopper or fries, Americans would gain a new appreciation for the unspoiled beauty of East German female swimmers, the brute strength of Bulgarian weightlifters and the superior teamwork of the Soviet Union's team handball squad.

McDonald's wouldn't know what

Academic suspensions vary; readmission requires review

By Brenda Birt Collegian Reporter

More than 2,000 undergraduate students are on academic probation this fall because of their spring 1988 semester grades.

The students are on probation because they failed to meet standard requirements, which are outlined in the Kansas State University Bulletin, said Charlotte Pfaff, records supervisor in the Registrar's office. The requirements are based on the total number of hours completed and their grade points from the previous semester.

The guidelines stipulate that a student cannot drop more than three points below a C average. For example, students who complete 12 hours must receive a minimum of 21 grade points. Students are placed on a probationary status when they earn less than the required number of points. A student can remain on probation an unlimited number of semesters.

However, students can eventually be dismissed from the University when their grade point repeatedly falls below certain standards. Students can be dismissed only after they fall more than 12 points below the C average and were on probation the previous semester.

In addition, students who neglect their academic responsibilities may be dismissed at any time with the recommendation of their academic dean, according to the bulletin.

This type of dismissal is used primarily for students who have not completed the college's requirements, have cheated in their courses or have not attended classes for several weeks, said William Feyerharm, associate dean of the College of Arts and Sciences.

Students who have been dismissed must appeal to an Academic Standards Committee for readmission. Each college has its own committee composed of the college's faculty members, but there is not a University-wide criteria used to base reinstatement, Feyerharm said.

Instead, committees examine each case on its individual merits.

"We're all looking for similarities," said Kay Stewart, assistant

"First, we need to maintain the academic standards of the institution, and second, we determine if the student is ready and will be successful."

To improve returning students' chances of success, the College of Business Administration requires that a reinstated student enroll in a course titled General Business. The course has been required for the last three years, and the college is currently studying its effects on the students.

"The preliminary results indicate that retention rates of reinstated students are much higher than they were before the course was required," Stewart said.

The College of Arts and Sciences' Academic Standards Committee's first priority is to aid students. This is accomplished not only by readmitting them to the University, but by dean of the College of Business counseling them on the problems they had before they were dismissed.

The nut of the whole procedure is the student sitting down and discussing it with the board," said Feyerharm. "They want students to be able to understand and articulate their problems."

The College of Architecture and Design also counsels students when they apply for readmission. Members of the college's committee consider the records of the students' performance.

"They review the courses as they relate to our curriculum," said William Jahnke, assistant dean of the College of Architecture and Design. "It's not just a review of GPA, but a review of all the courses that are an indicator of success in our program."

If a student appears to excel in classes that are not related to the college's curriculum, they advise a student to enter another college.

MOSCOW - An Armenian activist said about 400,000 people jammed the main square of Yerevan Tuesday night and heard renewed demands for Armenian annexation of Nagorno-Karabakh, where reports said a curfew was imposed and a bomb damaged a workers' dormitory.

New violence hit the disputed territory over the weekend, with one man said to have been killed and at least 25 people officially reported injured.

The Armenian activist, Rafael Popoyan, said many residents in the Armenian capital who struck last Friday remained off the job Tuesday, vowing to stay out until the Armenian Supreme Soviet, or parliament, met in new session to reconsider their annexation plea.

In a telephone interview from Yerevan on Tuesday, Popoyan said members of the Karabakh Committee, a group pressing for annexation of Nagorno-Karabakh, told the Yerevan crowd that one-third, or 115 members, of the republic's Supreme Soviet signed a request for a new session.

"At 10 o'clock tomorrow morning, people will be on the square waiting for an official announcement," Popoyan said. He said that according to law, the session must be held if one-third of the Supreme Soviet members request it.

Popoyan said committee members also told the crowd that a curfew was in effect in Stepanakert, the main city of Nagorno-Karabakh. Popoyan, a 46-year-old former political prisoner, said he had no details.

The predominantly Armenian population of Nagorno-Karabakh, a mountainous region of the republic of Azerbaijan, began agitating in February for annexation to Armenia. Ethnic riots broke out in Sumgait, an industrial city of Azerbaijan, at the end of February, that left at least 32 people dead.

Stargazers, research focus on Mars

By Kelly Campbell Collegian Reporter

Stargazers may have noticed that Mars seems to be getting brighter each night.

This isn't abnormal; the planet is just getting nearer to the Earth.

Ted Geisert, a laboratory technician in the Department of Physics, said that about every 17 years Earth and Mars reach a point, known as their closest approach, where they come very close together in their orbit of the sun.

The last time this occurred was in October 1971. Tonight the two planets will once again be at their closest approach — only 36,500,000

Mars is the first planet to be seen in the evening sky, rising in the east at about 10 p.m. A bright salmon pink object, it remains visible throughout the night, appearing to travel west as the earth rotates.

Geisert said Venus, Jupiter and can look at other heavenly bodies, Mars can easily be seen early in the morning before sunrise. Venus is located toward the southeast. Then Jupiter can be seen to the west. Even further west, Mars appears. These planets are easy to distinguish because they are the brightest objects in the sky.

Students and the public will have an opportunity to view Mars through powerful telescopes when members of the K-State Astronomy Club sponsor "Mars Mania" in October.

The Astronomy Club and physics department are celebrating the phenomenon with the "Mania" event, said Alan Runge, a senior in physics and president of the club. The event is scheduled for 9 p.m., Oct. 4 and 8. The 181/2 -inch telescope on top of Cardwell Hall will be available, and the 14-inch mobile celestron telescope will be set up on the west side of Cardwell Hall, Runge said.

In addition, several smaller telescopes will be available so people Runge said. "We will also have a presentation with either a slide show or video," he

"Right now, Mars is bright enough you can see it from anywhere in the city," Runge said. "It is so bright it's not dimmed by the street lights." The best place to view it, however, is a place where there is not any light in your eyes, he said.

"Just to look at it, you won't see much. But if you can get it magnified even with binoculars or a small telescope, you can see surface characteristics," Runge said. "If you look through a telescope at Mars, you can see the polar caps, which astronomers believe consist of frozen carbon dioxide and water," Geisert said.

"These polar caps grow in the winter and decrease in size in the now is their summer. The heat and the very thin atmosphere give rise to dust storms, which obscure a lot of the details on the planet," he said.

Right now, Mars is the brightest and biggest that we will see it for several years, and within two or three months will appear to shrink considerably, he said.

According to Geisert, Mars is at the forefront of research needs.

"Astronomers have not ruled out the possibility that life at one time occurred on Mars," he said. There is evidence that there was water there at one time, and that if man went to Mars he could produce the bare necessities of oxygen and water, Geisert said.

"Mars is about the only possible planet we could even hope to explore," he said. It is dry and cold, but is more earthlike than any other

State mental health services rated 42nd by national group

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA - Kansas mental health services, which received scathing criticism from two national organizations last week, has some serious problems, a legislative committee was told Tuesday.

However, one mental health official said the situation is not as grave as suggested in a national report, which said Kansas was one of four states "moving backward" in providing services for the mentally ill.

the Public Citizen Health Research Group and the National Alliance for the Mentally Ill, rated Kansas 42nd in the nation in its delivery of mental health services, compared to 11th in 1986.

"We do not generally agree with that report," Paul Klotz, executive director of the Association of Mental Health Centers, told the interim Committee on Ways and Means. "We know there are serious problems. The situation is bad, but not that bad."

He said the characterization of Kansas as moving backward in providing mental health services is not accurate.

The report said Gov. Mike Hay-The report, released last week by den has taken no interest in the problems of mental health treatment and "in terms of better programs and improvements coming in the near future, it will probably be more exciting to watch the wheat grow."

Klotz rejected that criticism of the situation in Kansas.

"We take exception to that kind of rhetoric," he said. "That's not the kind of rhetoric that will create the harmony needed to solve the problem."

Klotz said the state's 27 community mental health centers see more than 80,000 patients a year, about 5,000 of whom are people who are at risk.

Dr. Walt Menninger, a member of the Advisory Committee on Mental Health and Retardation Services and Community Health Services, said the critical report should raise some concerns.

Economy remains steady

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - An improving trade deficit helped economic growth remain strong in the second quarter despite the Farm Belt drought, but inflation was more severe than previously believed, the government said Tuesday.

The Commerce Department said the gross national product, the broadest measure of the nation's $4 trillion economy, grew at a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 3.0 percent in the April-June period. That was slower than the 3.4 percent expansion rate in the first quarter, but still

If not for the drought, secondquarter growth would have been a more robust 3.9 percent. Crop and livestock losses for the year are estimated at $13.9 billion and will be even more of a drag on the economy in the third and fourth quarters.

The government said accelerating inflation accompanied the strong growth. One price measure tied to the GNP rose at the fastest pace in nearly six years and was more than triple the first-quarter rate.

"However you measure inflation, we got more of it than we thought in the second quarter and that's bad news for the financial markets," said David Jones, an economist with Aubrey G. Lanston & Co., a government securities dealer in New York. Reacting to the report, the bond market opened weak in light trading.

The GNP deflator, which reflects changes in buying patterns as well as prices, rose at an annual rate of 5.5 percent in the second quarter, compared with 1.7 percent in the first quarter. It was the biggest jump since the third quarter of 1982.

The second-quarter deflator had been estimated a month earlier at a somewhat more moderate 5.1 percent. Also, the previous report had shown stronger second-quarter growth, 3.3 percent instead of 3.0

He plans to have fund raisers and seek donations from alumni, but it doesn't mean Bunker will be going door-to-door begging for help.

"I don't want people to see me coming and say, 'Oh no, here comes Bunker. He's going to want me to give him some money," he said.

"There's enough people out there that want to help. There's enough people who are sick of seeing K-State's golf team finish eighth in the conference each year. They just need to be asked," Bunker added.

Unlike his predecessor, Rob Sedorcek, who resigned as coach last month so he could possibly enter the professional ranks, Bunker plans to totally dedicate himself to K-State's program. Starting Oct. 1, Bunker assumes his duties as full-time coach for the men's and women's teams.

"There's no doubt the women's team has felt slighted the past couple of years, but I've got the time to work with them and I'll be 100 percent dedicated to them as well," Bunker

Bunker has served as an assistant golf professional at country clubs in Bettendorf and Davenport, Iowa and at Manhattan. As for the teams' immediate goals, it's simply to improve their games.

"I'm not here to teach these teams how to play golf," Bunker said. "They're supposed to know that before they get here."

It will take time, patience and money to build K-State's golf program back to respectability, but Bunker is a confident man.

"There's no doubt in my mind that I'm the right man for the job," he

Rioting rocks Shreveport

By The Associated Press

SHREVEPORT, La. - Rock throwing Wednesday night prompted police to barricade an area where hundreds of angry black people burned stores and rioted the previous night after a white woman fatally shot a black man.

Police said they set up roadblocks to detour traffic after receiving reports that black people were throwing rocks and bottles at cars on a busy thoroughfare. But no major damage was reported and there were no arrests, police said. Six people were arrested during the previous night's

"We're sitting on a powder keg," said state Rep. Alphonse Jackson, who called for a biracial anti-crime

"People want protection," said Jackson, who is black. "I call on citizens to restore law and order."

His plea followed a meeting of city officials and black leaders to discuss the rioting that persisted nearly five hours, until 3 a.m. Wednesday, and which officials said was related both to drugs and racial problems.

Stores were looted and burned, and rioters threw rocks and bottles at whites. There were reports of racial slurs and chants of "Hot Biscuit," the do nothing but accelerate it." restaurant where a white teen-ager killed a black teen-ager on Aug. 4, an incident that set off racial tension in this northwestern Louisiana city of 250,000, the state's second largest after New Orleans.

On Tuesday night, police cordoned off a seven-block area and warned motorists to keep out.

The crowd reached 1,000 people at its peak, said Police Chief Charles Gruber, but other police estimates said the total was 300 to 500 most of the time.

The police chief said his car took a brick through the windshield and gunfire through the back passenger door, but he was not hurt.

A KTBS-TV news car was burned and a new fire department pumper was attacked with bats and bricks.

No serious injuries were reported, attributed in part to Gruber's decision to let the disturbance run its course. Throughout the incident, police radios crackled with orders to maintain positions and hold fire.

"If Gruber had moved into the area, we would have had a large number of people hurt, so I commend him for it," said Jackson.

"We chose to let it cool off," Gruber said. "We felt our presence would white.

At least four people were reported taken into custody and booked with charges ranging from inciting to riot to resisting arrest.

The outbreak was triggered by the shooting of a black man, identified as William David McKinney, 20, who lived in the Cedar Grove neighborhood where the rioting took place. He was described by a witness as a bystander caught in gunfire when a drug deal went bad.

A white teen-ager, Tamala C. Vergo, 17, of Greenwood was booked on a charge of second-degree murder, said police Cpl. E.T. Rushing. A second woman was questioned but not charged.

A man who identified himself only as a cousin of McKinney's named Charles, said McKinney was shot at random after a woman trying to buy cocaine from a group of men was robbed. When they ran with her purse, she "took out her frustration" on McKinney, he said.

Officers said people in a convenience store tried to detain the woman until police came, but a crowd of blacks gathered outside and began throwing bricks at the business and all passing motorists who were

University keeps grass greener with new automatic sprinklers

By Alan Wilds Collegian Reporter

Keeping things growing is the objective behind the new sprinkler systems being installed on campus through a project that will eventually irrigate the majority of the University's grounds.

"It is a campus policy that any new construction that is done will include automatic sprinkler systems with it," said Mark Taussig, University landscape architect.

Taussig said sprinklers have already been installed on the grounds of Anderson Hall, Weber Hall, the Chemistry/Biochemistry Building and Bramlage Coliseum.

This policy was introduced by George Miller, vice president of administration and finance. Miller said that when he assumed the vice presidency, he introduced the policy of having every new project include major sprinkler systems. He went on to say that this does include parking bid was awarded the contract," he

"We are planning to water the major areas of the campus including the grounds around parking lots," Miller said.

Miller and Taussig agreed on some of the advantages of sprinkler systems. They said they will water the grounds much more efficiently and without so much labor since the systems are fully automatic.

the reduction of maintenance costs. Sidewalks will stay dry since all sprinklers are directed onto the lawn,

"We are trying to be more efficient and get away from the laborintensive watering," Miller said.

The companies that have been contracted to do the actual installation were selected on a bid basis, Taussig said.

"We did not have much choice in the matter. Whoever gave the lowest He said the system at Anderson

Hall was done by Double-bar Pine of Alta Vista. The Chem/Biochem Building system was installed by the Waterite Co. of Wichita, and the Bramlage system was done by Constant Care Co. in Kansas City. The cost of the project is more than $68,000 so far, Taussig said. This includes the systems at Anderson Taussig said the main advantage is Hall, the Chem/Biochem Building and Bramlage. Taussig said the system irrigating the central area of the campus will cost more than $47,000. Miller said the project is funded by the central reserves that are obtained through various sources and held by the president for use in purchasing instructional equipment and making campus improvements.

"I continuously ask for more money because we are currently $10 million behind as far as things we need," Miller said.

Consultant selection concerns local board

By Susan Faler Collegian Reporter

Action was taken by the Manhattan Unified School District Board of Education Wednesday night on the selection of planning consultants to advise on the use of additional space, programs and equipment for the growing district.

The board passed a motion instructing Superintendent Hal Rowe to contact other possible education consultants and update the standing bid by Schaefer, Johnson, Cox, Frey and Associates.

The revised proposal from Planning Advocates, Inc. eliminated certain phases, such as data collection and bond election assistance of the previous bid, bringing the estimated cost down from $62,500 to $54,345.

"I don't like the reduced cost, even though it's down to $54,000," said Roger Reitz, board member. "This whole thing has become very sticky."

Reitz said there is a lot of interest in the community for a change and to get decisions going for this particular

"This group (the Planning Advocates) seems to have a very involved systematic way of going at the idea of planning," he said. Barbara Withee, president of the board, said they faced three options. First was to accept the proposal already given, second to delay and accept proposals from other firms or third, decide to conduct the research on their own. "I've had a difficult time with how we handle the consultants," Reitz

Board member Joleen Hill said the board had to choose between two entirely different firms.

"One is an architectural firm and the other is an educational consultant," she said. "I really believe that what we are looking for is an educational consultant. I will not be satisfied with an architectural consultant, because what we are looking for is a group that will approach this from an educational point of view."

Talks to center on arms control

Indecision cited as major roadblock to agreement tion and on Capitol Hill.

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - U.S. officials expect little progress in arms control talks Thursday between Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze and President Reagan, in large part because the administration and Congress cannot agree on what strategic weapons to deploy in the future.

"We certainly know we can't finish the START (Strategic Arms Reduction Talks) treaty this year," Assistant Secretary of State Rozanne Ridgway told a congressional panel Tuesday.

The U.S. presidential election makes it hard to hammer out the incredibly complex details of a START agreement during Reagan's remaining four months in office, particularly the inspection regimes needed to verify proposed 30 percent to 50 percent cuts in strategic weapons systems.

Besides the devilish details, however, the United States has reached an impasse in its own strategic planning that vastly complicates efforts to conclude an arms control treaty, an agreement that would govern the deployment of American forces for decades.

Shevardnadze, who was arriving Wednesday afternoon, was to meet Thursday with Reagan, Secretary of State George Shultz and Vice President George Bush.

The talks, say U.S. officials, will concentrate mainly on the nonarms aspects of the administration's four-point agenda: bilateral relations, human rights and multilateral issues such as the withdrawal of Soviet troops from Afghanistan and Cuban troops from Angola.

Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev made little progress on arms control at the June summit in Moscow, and movement will probably be slow well into the next administration, according to many observers in the administra-

The three key stumbling blocks are the Star Wars program to develop land-and space-based antimissile weapons, the development and deployment of mobile intercontinental ballistic missiles (ICBMs), and whether to control submarine launched cruise missiles (SLCMs).

The Soviets oppose a START deal without a U.S. commitment that Star Wars research will not break the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile treaty for a set period of time, probably eight to 10 years.

The Soviets also want the United States to agree to a limit on nucleartipped submarine-launched cruise missiles, above the overall 6,000-warhead limit agreed upon in the proposed START treaty.

On the third major issue, the United States is pressing for a ban on all ground-launched mobile ICBM's, which would require the Soviets to dismantle their already deployed SS-24 and SS-25 mobile missiles.

The United States has not decided whether or how to deploy a mobile missile. The administration and Congress are sparring on whether to develop a 10-warhead rail-mobile MX missile, similar to the Soviet SS-24, or a singlewarhead road-mobile Midgetman, similar to the Soviet SS-25.

Reagan vetoed Congress' defense authorization bill for the fiscal year beginning Oct. 1 in part because it provided only about $4 billion for Star Wars versus the administration request of $4.8 billion, and because Congress insisted that Star Wars tests not violate the ABM pact.

The potential conflict between the ABM treaty and Star Wars, formally known as the Strategic Defense Initiative or SDI, has dominated public discussion of arms control for years.

BRIEFLY AROUND WORLD

Burma sees leadership change

RANGOON, Burma - Gen. Saw Maung on Wednesday became the fourth head of government in two months. The government said troops have killed more than 140 civilians since the hard-line officer ousted the civilian president on Demonstrators demanding democracy and a halt to 26 years of authoritarian rule stayed off the streets for a second day during the crackdown.

Troops killed 67 people, wounded 34 and arrested 100 "in the course of the government's law and order restoration work" in Rangoon and three other areas Tuesday and Wednesday, government spokesman Kyaw San told reporters.

Kyaw San said he had no knowledge of a rumored sweep by authorities against student leaders who spearheaded the prodemocracy protests.

The latest tally brought the official death toll since the coup to 144. But some Western diplomats in Rangoon believe at least 400 people have been killed in the Burmese capital alone, many when troops opened fire on largely unarmed protesters Monday.

'People's army' rules Haiti

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti - Soldiers who toppled the regime of Lt. Gen. Henri Namphy mutinied against more commanders Wednesday, dumping them handcuffed in front of army headquarters as crowds cheered.

Lt. Gen. Prosper Avril, made president Sunday after a coup led by Namphy's Presidential Guard, tried to quell the revolt Tuesday by naming a new armed forces chief and retiring nine unpopular commanding officers.

The situation is precarious. After all, we are in the midst of a general mutiny," a Western diplomat said Wednesday. Coup leaders have demanded that Avril institute democratic reforms, including free elections that Haiti has not had in 31

Soviet rioters continue protest

MOSCOW - Rioters burned homes and cars, and gunfire rang throughout a city at the heart of an annexation battle between the southern Soviet republics of Armenia and Azerbaijan, the official Tass news agency reported Wednesday.

Officials in Azerbaijan's disputed territory of Nagorno-Karabakh imposed a curfew and banned gatherings to cool ethnic passions after violence broke out Tuesday and Wednesday in and around Stepanakert, the territory's largest city.

In Yerevan, capital of neighboring Armenia, officials rejected a demand by thousands of protesters for a new meeting of the republic's Supreme Soviet, or parliament, to renew a petition for annexation of Nagorno-Karabakh, a mountain enclave.

'There are hundreds of thousands of people in front of the Supreme Soviet," said Arpenay Popoyan, wife of activist and former political prisoner Rafael Popoyan.

"The city is very tense," she said in a telephone interview from Yerevan. A general strike that began Sept. 16 continued. Her husband said later by telephone that a government announcement was read on Armenian television declaring such a session by the Supreme Soviet would be illegal and rejecting the demand.

NASA uses outdated ring in test

BRIGHAM CITY, Utah — An old-model nozzle inlet ring was used in the final test of Morton Thiokol's redesigned space shuttle booster rocket, but NASA doesn't believe the discovery will delay next week's scheduled shuttle launch, a spokesman said Wednesday.

NASA spokesman Ed Medal said it had not yet been determined if the outdated ring was used in the two boosters attached to the space shuttle Discovery, scheduled for launch Sept. 29, but preliminary investigation showed it had not.

"There's no indication that the old configuration is in the boosters (in Discovery). But we've got to go ahead and check the records and clear that," Medal said.

"We certainly don't believe the situation will impact the launch, though," Medal said at NASA's Marshall Space Flight Center in Huntsville, Ala., which oversees the booster rocket Asked how the ring with the old design might have been installed on the test rocket, he said, "We're taking a long, hard look at how the old ring got there. One of the leading possibilities is a cross labeling of parts."

Police kill naked man in church

NEW YORK - A naked man ran into St. Patrick's Cathedral on Wednesday night and attacked people with an iron prayer bookstand, killing one man and injuring a police officer before being shot to death by other officers, authorities said.

The man entered the church about 8 p.m. carrying red carnations and walked to a front alter, where he removed the prayer bookstand and repeatedly struck an usher before attacking a woman praying in a pew, according to police and witnesses.

The man was shot and killed by police after he attacked an officer trying to subdue him, said police spokesman Raymond O'Donnell.

Witness Scott Lucas, 56, said he saw the man tear off his shorts and white shirt on a street near the church.

"He suddenly stopped, stripped, and headed up the street. He was obviously disturbed," Lucas said. "He was not aware of anybody else."

Lucas said the man was "chanting under his breath" from the time he took off his clothes, which were found at 50th Street and Rockefeller Plaza. A parishioner, Peggy Strassburg, identified the dead church employee as an usher who was about 75 years old.

Evidence points to chemical use

WASHINGTON - Investigators for the Senate Foreign Relations Committee reported Wednesday that "overwhelming evidence exists" that Iraq subjected Kurdish villages to three days of poison gas attacks last month to break a strong insurgency by the Kurdish minority.

Basing their conclusions mainly on interviews with hundreds of eyewitnesses among the 65,000 Kurds who fled across Iraq's border with Turkey, the investigators conclude that the attacks were part of a deliberate policy by Iraq to end a strong Kurdish insurgency by depopulating the Kurdish regions of Iraq.

"We find no question that Iraq's policy in Kurdistan has the characteristics of genocide," the two staff members, Peter W. Galbraith and Christopher Von Hollen Jr., conclude in a report to Foreign Relations Chairman Claiborne Pell, D-R.I.

Pell, at a news conference, urged the House to quickly pass legislation, already adopted by the Senate, "to impose sanctions on Iraq as long as it continues to use chemical weapons and continues to pursue policies that may be genocidal in nature."

Students risk fines, prison while pirating free cable TV

By Amy Bullock Collegian Reporter

Watching television can be an enjoyable way to relax, but enjoying cable TV without paying for it can result in a $2,500 fine and a year in prison.

Tapping cable, or cable pirating, is theft of a service or receiving a service without paying for it, said Dan Hebert, regional manager for the Manhattan Cable Company.

Cable pirating is not a big problem in Manhattan because of the tight security system used by Manhattan Cable TV, Hebert said.

"We take different sections of the city every month and audit that section. We are looking for cable lines that are activated against lines that are being paid for," he said.

Figures from the county attorpirating has been reported, but no one has been prosecuted.

When a party is found pirating cable, service is immediately disconnected, Hebert said. First-time offenders are informed of the consequences and given the option to pay for the services they stole.

If they choose not to pay, they are charged with illegal cable tapping, which is a misdemeanor, he

If a party is caught cable tapping a second time, the cable company presses charges, Hebert said, adding that second-time offenders face felony charges.

"What many people don't realize is that they are breaking the law or, in fact, actually stealing," he

> "I tried to make a tool like the one I had, but I couldn't. So I just took it back the way it was. It wasn't that noticeable, but if someone was looking closely enough, they would have noticed the screws weren't on the same way," he said.

Van Zile plan considered

By Stephanie Morrill Collegian Reporter

Van Zile, the residence hall constructed in 1926 and forced to close its doors in 1984, may reopen within two years with preliminary plans to return it to a residence hall.

A proposal is being considered that would connect Putnam, Boyd and Van Zile halls, said Tom Frith, director of housing.

The biggest reason for reopening Van Zile is increased enrollment, along with the fact that it was the first residence hall established at K-State, said Robert Krause, vice president for institutional advancement.

The reopening of Van Zile "will probably cause an increase of oncampus housing bills for students," Krause said, but no exact amount has yet been determined.

An enclosed walkway would join the three buildings making Van Zile the center of administration and would include a dining room for the residents of the buildings. Upperlevel floors would be used as students' living quarters. Van Zile was closed in 1984 for renovations and was scheduled to reopen upon completion. Due to declining enrollment, then Universi-

(It) will probably cause an increase of oncampus housing bills for students."

> -Robert Krause vice president for institutional advancement ty President Duane Acker decided against spending the money on renovations, closing the building indefinitely.

The proposal to reopen Van Zile should be ready to present to the housing advisory council in about two weeks, Krause said.

If the proposal is accepted, construction and renovations could begin as early as fall of 1990, or as late as fall of 1991, Krause said.

One of the first items that needs to be taken care of is taking the building off state ownership. Van Zile Hall was given over to state ownership in 1984 in order to eliminate continuing maintenance costs associated with the building after it was closed,

Krause said. "Next we have to work with the state for financing," he said. Plans for reopening the hall are still in the preliminary stages, Frith said, and no exact dates have been established for beginning construction of the enclosed walkway. At present, there are no other proposals being considered. Because the architects are still working on the plans, the total cost of the project has not been determined, Krause said.

Van Zile Hall opened its doors in 1926 and was named after Mary Pierce Van Zile, who served in the College of Home Economics from 1908 to 1918. Van Zile also served as Dean of Women from 1908 to 1939.

student allergies Factors increase

By Susan Faler

Collegian Reporter

The number of students receiving allergy injections in August in Lafene Student Health Center has increased by 144 compared with August, 1987.

Changes in the environment, such as lack of rain and increased amounts of pollen, are aggravating many allergies, said Cindy Burke, registered nurse and Lafene health educator.

Stress also influences allergic reactions, she said.

Because statistics concerning allergy shots are compiled manually, Lafene will not have figures for September until Oct. 1.

An allergy is an unusual reaction or sensitivity to a substance, according to Allergies and You, a pamphlet available at Lafene.

"You can be born with allergies, and suddenly something can change in your environment that will set your allergies off," Burke said.

Substances that cause allergies are called allergens. They include some types of pollen, animals, foods, mold and dust. They cause reactions such as sneezing, runny nose, hives, rashes, itching, and difficulty in breathing.

Symptoms such as shortness of breath, wheezing and coughing may indicate that a person has asthma.

"What happens is that the lungs close, making it difficult to breathe," Burke said. "Allergies are different from asthma. Asthma is a result of allergies, and just because you have allergies doesn't necessarily mean you will get asthma." Allergies can be hereditary, but often they are caused by a change in environment, according to the

"I thought I had outgrown my allergies, until this year," said Wendy Mannen, sophomore in pre-law. "It has been really bad for the past two weeks. I've felt so drained from fighting my sniffles."

Physical exams, personal history and family medical history can give clues to possible causes of allergies. Skin tests are reliable for some types of allergies, including mold, trees, grass, dogs, cats and dust.

Once the cause of the allergy is known, a serum can be made. Once injected, the serum cues the body to produce new antibodies that prevent the antigen from combining with sypmtom-causing antibodies.

"It costs $10 a semester to be given the shots (at Lafene) in the allergy clinic," Burke said. "We have a refrigerator that we can keep the students' serum in so they don't have to bring it with them.'

Burke said she advises students not to give themselves the shots nor to let a friend give them the shots, in case they have an allergic reaction to the serum. Even if the student has never had a reaction, one may occur within 20 minutes after the injection.

System would suffer by adding Washburn

Just when you thought the regents institutions couldn't possibly get any hungrier for better financing, state policy-makers are considering setting another place at the table for Topeka's Washburn University.

Washburn would be more welcome if the state universities weren't so starved in terms of funding. The Margin of Excellence should in reality be called the Margin of Mediocrity: its goal is to bring the faculty salaries up to only 95 percent of the average of faculty salaries at the universities' peer institutions.

Add to this the fact that equipment and maintenance of facilities at the regents institutions are sadly underfunded as well. "Excellence" in this case is a relative term — and too loosely used — but apparently taken to heart by those who would like to ease the burdens of the taxpayers of Topeka by adding to those of the state.

Washburn, a municipal university financed mainly by a 17 mill property tax on the citizens of Topeka and student tuition and fees, already receives about $4 million a year from the state. While this is a fair amount of money, it is barely comparable to what it would cost the state to integrate and completely support Washburn as a state university.

Furthermore, no one can guarantee that the quality and financial problems of Washburn will fare any better as a state institution. One only has to consider the conditions of the present state universities to see the lack of logic in that.

The consequences of adding another university to the state system are obvious. Incredibly, though, these consequences are apparently being disregarded by those who propose and support the addition of Washburn.

The last thing anyone needs to do is adopt another baby into a family of starving children.

Other Perspectives

With Sen. David Karnes' announcement Monday that he - like Bob Kerrey - will not take part in any debates, voters are left without the most effective method of judging a candidate's suitability for office.

The travesty began when Kerrey refused to participate in a debate Sunday because of the inclusion of New Alliance Party candidate Ernie Chambers.

On Monday, Karnes called Kerrey a "debate-buster" and said he will not debate either Chamber or Kerrey. Karnes said Kerrey has destroyed the debate process because Kerrey was not serious about telling his views.

Come on guys, grow up. Both Karnes and Kerrey have reduced the senate race to a childish squabble. Chambers and any other candidates on the ballot should be included in the debates. Without all the candidates, voters cannot make a knowledgeable decision.

With no debates, voters are "informed" only by flashy commercials and clever, media-catching generalities. The race becomes a battle of pretty faces and empty heads.

Karnes and Kerrey have found convenient excuses for copping out — a hallmark of this race.

Kerrey's argument that he won't debate because the New Alliance Party is too small to acknowledge shirks his duty to voters. And so do Karnes' excuses.

Only Kerrey and Karnes can fix the situation. For the sake of Nebraskans, they must agree to participate in all senatorial debates - with all senatorial candidates.

Candidate debates avoid issues Voters prefer image over substance

ebate. The word brings to mind two or more people on opposite sides of an issue discussing it in a forum until an agreement is reached or the audience is swayed in favor of one side. There may be brilliant, fiery speeches, heated cross-examinations, loud accusations and even louder denials, but most of all, an important issue will be discussed, dissected and examined, and one side will win.

It requires quick thought, quick words and, sadly enough, audience appeal.

That is where the presidential debates come into play. These are supposed to be forums where the American public can see the two mainstream candidates for president in action: defending their policies, attacking their opponent, being bright, witty, thoughtful and, most of all, looking good.

Looking good. Isn't that the real reason behind all of this debate propaganda?

Debates certainly aren't made to judge which man would be a more capable president. After all, how often does the president face a real-life debate situation? Rarely is the president on his own to determine policy in the United States.

Not that this is bad. Would we really want our president to be thinking on his feet and changing policy ideas on a whim, without the loyal support and research of his speechwriters, cabinet and committees? Really, imagine Ronnie getting up for a press conference and just saying what's on his mind. We would more than likely be engaged in a war with some country that wanted to "make our day" before he even was done speaking.

These debates also don't settle any real issues. The issues discussed are all mainstream arguments that have been around for years. And their proposed solutions are the same old, musty party platforms that we've heard about since the last election. Without a third party added to the debates, we are assured of another "safe" round of debates, with neither opponent worrying about having to discuss anything new or innovative.

Thus, the candidates really don't have to worry about thinking on their feet. Mostly it is a test of memorization and reaction time a game to see who can spew out the proper party policy answer when the opponent says the key phrase to trigger it.

Both candidates admit they are taking time to carefully prepare for the debate. Bush likened it to a game when he said, "I think I've done the homework. It's like a ball game, getting up for it - mentally up and physically up." Meanwhile, he has drastically cut back his appearances for the week before the

On the other side of the fence, Dukakis also has planned to slow down at the end of the week to prepare for the debate.

Now you have to wonder, what exactly are they preparing for and how are they preparing? These men have been in politics for years. They are vying for the head leadership position in our country, and they have to take a week off to prepare for a debate on topics that certainly shouldn't be new to either one of them.

Just imagine if one of these men were president — he would have to take off a week before each press conference to figure out where he stood.

re they really examining the issues, or are they going over all the possible arguments of their opponent and memorizing snappy answers so they won't need to analyze or think something through during the debate?

Maybe I'm wrong. Maybe instead of working on memorizing the key phrases they'll need, they are working on the factor that will probably be the most important issue during the debate - their images.

While each camp insists that its candidate is addressing the important issues, they also have to admit that image is probably the major factor in who will win the election. And if it isn't, then why all of the fuss over the height of the podium? Bush doesn't want to stoop over a podium that is fewer than 46 inches high, and Dukakis doesn't want to be lost behind a podium that is more than 45 inches high.

t's more important how they will look than what they will argue about. A recent New York Times-CBS poll asked what was most important when voters were deciding how they would cast their ballots. Nineteen percent chose the issues, while 67 percent chose competence. So the American voters must feel that how the candidates talk is more important than what they talk about. Does he act like he knows what he is doing? Does he look as if he is in command? Is he inspiring? This is truly an age of actors when it comes to politics.

These ideals form the issues that campaigners are going to have to concentrate on. So it is important for them to appear confident and choose topics to inspire a sense of national pride, such as whether children should say the pledge of allegiance in school, regardless of the issues' actual impact on national policy.

Enough of these debates. We've heard them acclaimed as a way to get to the issues, a way to see where the candidates stand on important issues. But, if we're going to have these debates, let's look at them as what they are: a kind of beauty pageant/talent show where each candidate has a certain amount of time to convince us that he is the sort of guy we would want to follow.

As far as the debate itself goes, don't expect to hear any great revelations or exciting new solutions. I would expect the best debating to be done before the actual debate as the two camps argue over who will be the mediator and what fraction of an inch the podium height should be.

Be aware of Vietnam

The age 33 is neither too young nor too old on this college campus, but that is how old I am. In reaching the age of 33 I have seen my share of changes in the world and in our own country. In the past 10 years or more there has been a change in our awareness and tribute to the men who fought in Vietnam. In the near future this campus intends to erect a monument to those K-State students who fought and died in that war.

When I think of the Vietnam war I get uneasy inside. I want to cry for those who fought and died. I want to cry for the loved ones who lost their sons, husbands and fathers. I feel anger at those who were in Congress and refused to declare it a war. I feel anger at those who profited at the expense of the young. Mostly I feel confused and angry with myself for not letting myself speak out about how I felt. I shouldn't have been afraid of how my parents would feel if I protested the war. Neither should I have been afraid of hugging a soldier who had returned from Vietnam. I felt like I was put in the middle and told by both sides not to move. Then and now I feel that I was not to understand how either side felt. But I did understand and yet I still feel a fear of speaking out.

When this monument is built I want each and every one of us to see it. But when you see this monument you should also know that there are still soldiers missing from the Do you know anyone who has appealed a Vietnam war. There are still families who wonder about their loved ones. On my arm are two reminders of this fact. One is a bracelet that I received in 1971 with the name Capt. James White, missing since November 24, 1969. The other bracelet bears the name Maj. Richard A. Claflin, missing since July 26, 1967. The last bracelet I received three years ago from a non-profit organization called Homecoming II. I haven't always worn these bracelets because I was afraid. But I have put them both back on and I plan to keep them on to show you and others that I still care about Vietnam. Merrilees Owens

Police out of line

Hurray for the local Gestapo unit! They're going to buy a $80,000 computer to keep track of all us student criminals out here. I went to the trouble of buying a $30 parking permit. I still ended up getting a ticket for parking in the wrong lot. The sign identifying those qualified to park happened to be obscured by tree branches and spray painted over with black paint. A simple warning would have corrected my erring way. Is that what I got? No!

I thought about appealing the ticket but soon realized how ridiculous that idea was.

traffic ticket and won?

K-State security seems to be working overtime to insure that they are disliked by the entire student body. I also get the uneasy feeling that police actions are being sanctioned by the administration. Raising the tuition rate is being resisted by students. The administration gets the money from us anyway by bringing it in the back door.

Things don't change

In reference to Mark Schmeller's column "Insight into the subtleties of male bonding," I would like to congratulate you on the fine manner in which you demonstrate that no matter how much you men pretend to poke fun at male bonding (as "a vital part of the socialization process") and other selfrighteous practices of your patriarchal society, what still matters most in the end is that you "got it up" to 21 inches.

Candidates engage in media strategies

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - When reporters were ushered into the Goya food plant in New Jersey to photograph George Bush sampling Hispanic delicacies, Bush waved off their questions because he was engaged in "food tasting" at the moment. "We gotta get the message out," he said.

Both Bush and rival Michael Dukakis have embarked on a strategy to keep reporters at bay, eschewing any meddlesome questions while staging state-of-the-art photo and video tableaus to go with whatever the campaign sages have determined will be the message of the day. That day for Bush, the message was an appeal to Hispanic and blue-collar

The strategy has led to a run of picture-perfect events for Bush. Dukakis has been less successful in this made-for-television venture, but both camps have forced journalists into spoon-fed campaign days with little opportunity to pin down the candidates on relevant political topics and events.

Reporters covering Bush find themselves at increasingly greater distances from him - so far. observed USA Today reporter Jessica Lee, that "we're even out of shouting distance now."

Reporter Ellen Warren of Knight-Ridder has taken to wearing a mono-cular - similar to binoculars, with only one lens — so that she can observe Bush up close from her faraway press perch.

While both candidates have steadily reduced their access to reporters since the primary campaign ended, Dukakis remains more accessible than Bush. But the Democrat saves most of his availability for late-night airport arrivals, past most media deadlines for all but the most drama-

He still has an average of one or two news conferences a week. That is far fewer than before a campaign survey found he was most often pictured on television responding to reporters' questions about Bush's allegations of the day rather than getting out his own tailor-made

Days go by with no opportunity to question Bush. Since he claimed the Republican nomination in mid-August, his scheduled question-andanswer sessions with reporters have dwindled to an average of one a week, and chances to shout questions at airports and rope lines are significantly fewer.

Campaign officials make no bones about limiting their candidates' news conferences, or even the less-formal 'press availabilities" where the candidate agrees to take questions from journalists clustered around him.

The thrill of victory, the agony of defeat

The Westmoreland team celebrates afte scoring a touchdown in overtime.

In a ... Small town

Westmoreland High School football players listen to assistant coach Gary Glendening in the locker room after their 16-14 loss to Blue Valley High.

Eight-man football lives in area towns

The crowd is hushed. The home team digs in for one last stand against its archrival which has pushed the ball to the halfyard line. It is fourth down. It is overtime. Both teams are down by three.

That was the situation Friday night when the Westmoreland Wildcats and the Blue Valley-Randolph Rams lined up for what was to be the second-to-last play of an exciting, hard fought, high school football game. That is, an exciting, hard fought, high school, eight-man football game.

Scenes like this are rare at any level, but to the more than 100 Kansas high schools that participate in eight-man football, such a situation might come along only once in a season, or maybe once in two seasons.

A boon to some, and blasphemy to others, eight-man is a brand of football that is usually low on drama and high on scoring.

"The basics are the same," said Tom Smith, head coach at Blue Valley. "It's still comes down to blocking and tackling." However, the differences in the eight-man game are not hard to spot. The first and most obvious difference is each team fields only eight players instead of the usual eleven. With two less linemen and one less back, the line of scrimmage at an eight-man game takes on the look of a kind of hybrid touch-football game.

Looks can be deceiving, however, because the helmets are real, and the sounds of popping pads and grunting teen-agers are just as loud here as they are at any other high school level of football.

A second major difference is size. The field is 80 yards long and somewhat less wide than the standard 11-man version. The players, the schools and the crowds are also, well, small.

In fact, smallness is the entire reason behind the existence of the eight-man game. Eight-man football was invented as a solution for schools with too few students for an 11-man team and too many fans to quit playing altogether.

Westmoreland and Blue Valley-Randolph began playing eight-man football about six years ago when the last of the baby-boomers graduated and enrollment began to dwindle.

"I'm an 11-man coach, but no one doubts the reasons behind the switch (to eightman)." said Mike Zabel, head coach at Westmoreland.

The strategies in eight-man football also differ from the 11-man game.

Eight-man teams usually pick out an opponent's major weakness, often one player, and exploit it relentlessly.

"Eight-man is a difficult game to coach. There is so much one-on-one play that it ment is 55, there are 18 students out for foot-

Blue Valley players hug after their overtime win Friday in Westmoreland.

makes defense impossible," Zabel said. "You can be just a little worse than the other team and get beat by 40 points." However, anyone who thinks these schools don't take their football seriously could use a quick lesson in statistics.

At Westmoreland High, where the enroll-ball. It has four team managers, nine cheerleaders and most of the remaining 24 students are in the band.

Also, the Westmoreland Booster Club has nearly 400 members, and though the combined population of Westmoreland and Randolph is about 800, nearly half of the residents were in attendance Friday night.

These numbers would be the equivalent to, say, Manhattan High School playing Lawrence High School and having 35,000 people show up to watch. Each school would also need approximately 450 football players, 90 team managers, 225 cheerleaders, 500 band members and about 40,000 in the booster club. So stop snickering, city slicker.

About the only real disadvantage to a small school playing the eight-man game is with the individual athlete.

"I had a super player a few years ago that could have played major college ball, but no one would look at him," Zabel said. "The mentality toward (the eight-man game) is that we don't produce players.'

However, a few top players have been recruited out of the Kansas eight-man ranks.

Nolan Cromwell of Ransom High School went on to become an All-American quarterback for the University of Kansas, and later was an All-Pro defensive back for the Los Angeles Rams.

Also, Paul Coffman, who once played for the Chase High School Kats, became an all-Big Eight tight end for K-State and an All-Pro for the Green Bay Packers.

But the average eight-man player is just that, average.

"At a (big school) you try and get the 6-foot-2, 200-pound kid with quickness," Smith said. "In eight-man, you settle for the 5-foot-8, 160-pound kid with quickness."

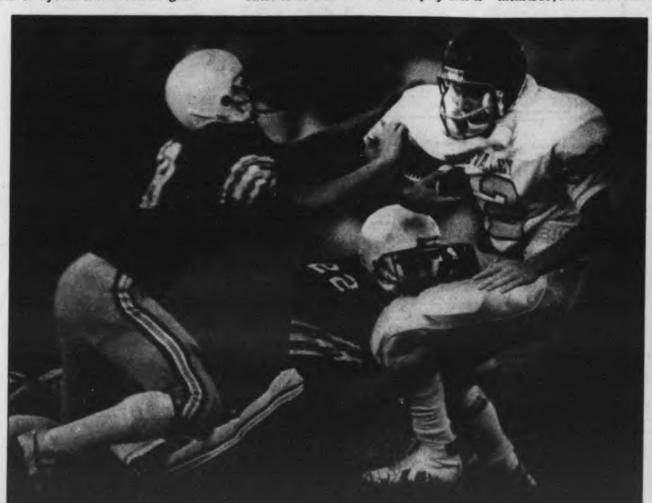

Quickness and offense are usually the name of the game in eight-man football, but on Friday evening the game came down to strength and defense.

On the second-to-last play of the game, Blue Valley running back Heath Sump took a handoff at the 1-yard line, and powered his way into the end zone, tying the score at

As the two teams lined up for Blue Valley's try at the two-point conversion and the win, coaches yelled last-second instructions to their players, fans screamed encouragement to their team and damnation to the opposition, cheerleaders held their breath and a lone trumpet played "Let's Go Blue." At the snap, Sump again took a handoff from his quarterback, and was hit by two 'Westy" Wildcats as he reached the 1-yard line. Sump stretched, his hands and the ball crossing the goal line. Blue Valley 16, Westmoreland 14.

Blue Valley player Raul Llorente is tackled by two Westmoreland defenders in the first half.

The field for eight-man football is 80 yards long, compared to 100 yards for a normal field.

PAC-CATS is funded by a twoyear, $65,000 grant from the Department of Education Fund for the Improvement of Post-secondary Education (FIPSE). Donna Edwards, PAC-CATS program coordinator, said the grant was received in September 1987 and will expire in September 1989.

Personal Achievement Contracts (PACS) are a major part of the PAC-CATS program. PACS list six areas of wellness: physical, emotional, intellectual, spiritual, vocational and Bill Arck, director of Alcohol and Other Drug Education Services, said PACS were set up as a motivator to help students maintain their goals, unlike New Year's Resolutions, which are usually not kept. He said if students develop positive wellness habits now, they will continue those habits for the rest of their lives.

"When you get older, wellness takes on a larger significance in your life," he said.

Peer Assistant Leaders (PALS) are trained peer counselors who work with students to "help them establish their goal for the PAC and to work toward that goal," Edwards said. Students meet with their PAL weekly to discuss their progress and any questions or worries they have about their Peer counseling is not uncommon, Edwards said, and can be found in most programs, including the residence hall system. But PAC-CATS has a unique focus, she said.

"Our program combines the wellness emphasis along with the peer counselors," Edwards said.

Although the grant for PAC-CATS was received last fall, this will be the first full semester of operation for the program. A few students completed PACS late last spring, Edwards said, and now there are eight to 10 students working on Another part of the PAC-CATS program is the Lifestyle Assessment Questionnaire. It is a comprehensive computerized health assessment that is free to all students, Edwards said.

The LAQ consists of four sections: wellness inventory, topics for personal growth, risk of death, and alert medical/behavioral/emotional. Students answer questions in each of the sections, and their answers are evaluated by a computer. Students receive a printout of their results and discuss them with a PAL.

The LAQ was developed by the University of Wisconsin at Stevens-Point and is currently used by more than 100 universities, Edwards said.

Mason: quitters immature

By The Associated Press

LAWRENCE - Kansas Coach Glen Mason Tuesday called the three players who quit the team earlier this week "immature kids with a lot of growing up to do."

Mason delivered an emotional 20-minute response to the players' charges that his coaching methods had forced them out of the football program. Mason, preparing the team for this weekend's road trip to California at Berkeley, was stunned by the players' decision Monday to quit the team.

Sophomores Mike Dinnel and Mike Whitaker and freshman Darrin Samuels quit after the Jayhawks' 56-7 loss to Auburn last weekend. Their defection raised to 12 the number of players who have left since Mason took over in December.

The three defensive linemen all left the team without telling Mason or an assistant coach. They said they did not feel comfortable about approaching Mason.

"Mason is very business-like," Dinnel said in a telephone interview from his home in Commerce City, Colo.

Mike Whitaker, who left Lawrence with Dinnel Tuesday, said, "I didn't want to hurt anyone. I guess we didn't talk to anybody to avoid problems and confrontations."

Darrin Samuels, who has left school because he cannot afford to stay at KU without a scholarship, said he did not want to talk to Mason.

"I have nothing against the program," he said in a telephone interview from his home in Dickinson, Texas. He said that he was sorry he didn't talk to Coach Hilles and Coach Eumont but did not regret telling Coach Mason of his decision to

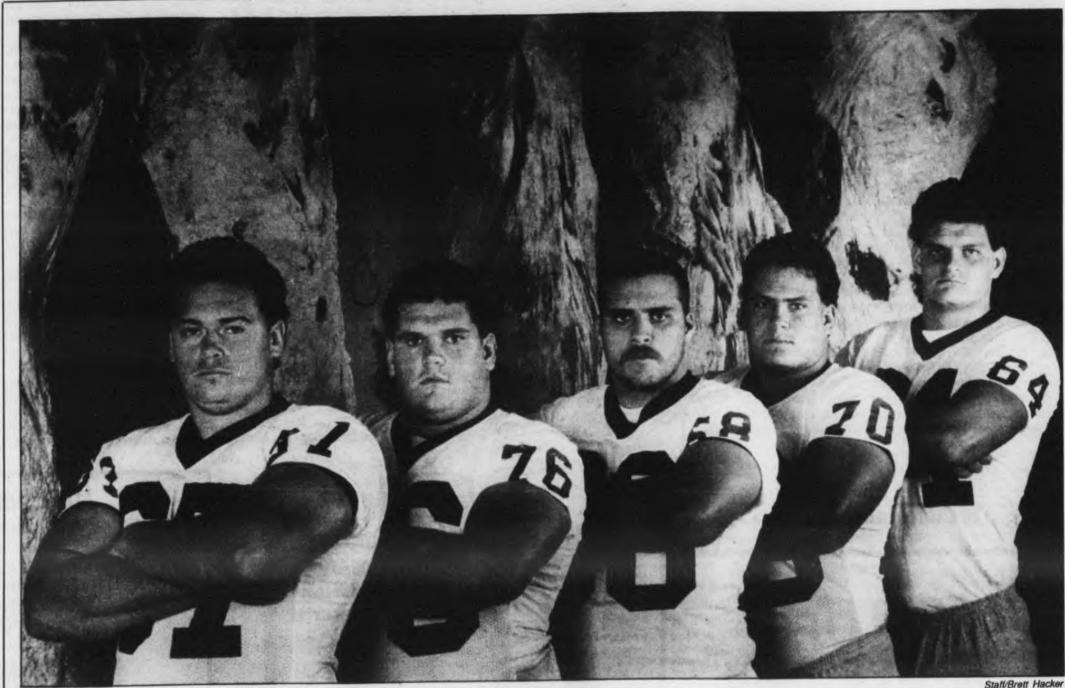

"As far as I'm concerned, if there was a problem, I wasn't aware of it, and they didn't try and work it out,"

Mason said. Mason said he was especially hurt by the fact that all three players were on scholarship. Kansas, under NCAA guidelines, cannot give those scholarships to other players this season.

Whitaker was recently put on scholarship by Mason.

"I had enough of a personal relationship to give Mike Whitaker a scholarship," Mason said. "And I've got kids out here who could've had that scholarship, and I can't give it to them. That doesn't seem right, does it?" Mason said.

Meet K-State's 'heavies':

Offensive line forms fraternity

By Chris Hays Sports Writer

When a team allows nine quarterback sacks in a game, as K-State did in their 20-16 loss to Tulane Saturday, there are always numerous places to put the blame.

Did the Wildcat running backs miss their blocks? Did the inexperience of sophomore quarterback Carl Straw cause him to hold the ball longer than he should have? Did the offensive linemen miss their assignments? Or did Tulane's defense just come up with some outstanding plays?

The blame usually falls on the offensive lineman - the men in the trenches who never seem to get credit for good plays.

When things go poorly, they are Faulkner (6-1, 275); sophomore things go well, you hear about a quarterback or a running back," said Mike Deal, K-State's offensive

"As far as individual glory, it doesn't ever really come for them. They don't get this many sacks or that many tackles. The only stats kept for them are negative. ... They have nobody but themselves to count on."

This is probably why K-State's offensive line has formed its own fratemity and nicknamed itself the "heavies."

Nine returnees, who average 6-foot-3, 270-pounds, headline the

the first to get the blame. And when tackle Shawn Fleming (6-3, 260); junior tackle Will McCain (6-3, 270); sophomore tackle Rick Mears (6-5, 260); sophomore guard Bob coordinator and offensive line Pacchioli (6-3, 270); senior tackle Russ Stange (6-7, 260); redshirtfreshman tackle Doug Warren (6-5, 270); junior center Paul Yniguez (6-3, 280); and junior guard Eric Zabelin (6-1, 275).

These are the "heavies," and even though each is listed at only one position, most can move up and down the line and are listed at least twice on K-State's depth chart, but Deal wishes that wasn't case.

"We would rather be three or four deep at each position and not have 6-foot-3, 270-pounds, headline the to make these guys learn two or "heavies:" junior guard Chad more positions," Deal said. "But our numbers situation is just not football team that the offensive line what it is at an Oklahoma or a Nebraska, so we're forced to make a guy play all over. It's definitely not out together, which they thought would help them work together better on the football field. It also spawned the nickname.

"It (the 'heavies') was everybody's idea, not just one person," Yniguez said. "The guys all want to work together."

The linemen said they can gain the respect of each other by coming together as a whole, instead of developing an "every-man-for-himself" attitude.

"It's kind of universal on every

The offensive front returned four starters -Stange (the lone senior), Faulkner, Zabelin and McCain - and the entire line allowed only 18 sacks in last year's 0-10-1 season.

But, after the Wildcats' 35-7 loss to Tulsa in which the Golden Hurricane dumped Straw four times, the "heavies" have taken on a different

Perfection highlights Seoul Games

Olympic Briefly

By The Associated Press

SEOUL, South Korea - If one synchronized swimmer drowns, must the other? If a gymnast looks back for the high bar in the middle of a double-death-defying Fajkusz, should he - like Lot's wife - have to pay a price?

Outrageous as those questions might be, judges are facing an even tougher one because of the rash of perfection that has broken out at these Olympic Games: Exactly what makes a 10?

"For me," said women's gymnastics judge Iuliana Dragomirescu of Romania, "it is when all is perfect and the routine is done with - how do you say it - amplitude and elegance.

"It comes when they have something inside," she continued, clutching both hands to her heart. "One feels that. Then you can judge the elements and anticipate.'

Judges anticipated perfection five times during the final of the women's team gymnastics competition Wednesday night, after awarding a dozen 10s to the men just one night earlier.

Elena Shushunova made the Soviet team golden by managing the feat three times. Sprite Daniela Silivas could get just two, which is where Romania finished. Each now has four, three behind Nadia Comaneci's record, with individual events still to come.

The men have been climbing even closer to heaven. Seven perfectos went to the Soviets en route to their team gold Tuesday night - three to the brilliant Dmitri Bilozerchev, two more to Valeri Lyukin - and two enough in succession for a pair of them, lifting their comrades past the Chinese for the bronze medal.

Things got so out-of-hand at one point during the men's events even the Koreans in the crowd - usually neutral, but always polite - joined in the booing after East German Andreas Wecker took the slightest hippity-hop after landing a triple somersault off the high bar and had to live with near-perfection: 9.9.

"To some extent," said Hardy Fink of Canada, a judge with 19 years and Subjectivity may be great for beauty contests or the racetrack, but it's a decidedly less-than-perfect way to settle sporting contests in the crucible that is the Olympics.

It can mean the front of the Wheaties box - remember Mary Lou Retton's 10s on the final two exercises at Los Angeles to overtake Romanian Kati Szabo for the gold or a diet made up largely of what's inside.

More than a few Olympic sports employ judges, but most of them also employ a system, however crude, of checks and balances. Boxers lose close decisions, but they also take matters out of the judges' hands by hitting an opponent so hard that even his close relations lose consciousness. Same with taekwondo.

But not diving and gymnastics and those poor stepchildren, synchronized swimming and rhythmic gymnastics. And those are the only ones, theoretically, where perfection validates performance.

So what is a 10?

In gymnastics, a perfectly executed routine begins at a base of 9.4, with bonus points possible in each of three categories: courage, originality and virtuosity.

Tiny Nadia of Romania squeezed out the first set of 10s ever awarded in Olympic gymnastics in 1976, and judges have rolled them out in fits and starts ever since.

"The 10s tend to get grouped around the Olympics," said Fink, the gymnastics judge, "because of the level of competition. New tricks are introduced, which translate into originality points, or courage points, sometimes both."

'Cats return to practice

After a two-day vacation from the rigors of practice, K-State's football team returned to work Wednesday.

The Wildcats, who do not play again until an Oct. 1 Homecoming game against Louisiana Tech, began preparations for the Bulldogs.

The only Wildcat to miss Wednesday's workout was fullback Lee Pickett. He was out with a case of turf toe suffered in last week's game against Tulane. He is expected back Friday.

Olympics' TV ratings fall

SEOUL, South Korea - Ratings for NBC's first four primetime shows were 32 percent lower than ABC's at the 1984 Summer Olympics. The Seoul shows averaged a 16.3, compared with 23.6 for the comparable telecasts from Los Angeles. A rating point equals 886,000 households.

NBC's early ratings are 21 percent lower than the network projected, even though ABC and CBS are showing reruns and movies because of production delays caused by the writers' strike.

Barring a complete disaster, though, the network expects to turn a profit on its $440 million Olympic investment. NBC spent $300 million for broadcast rights and another $140 million on production and equipment, but covered the costs by selling about $550 million worth of ads.

Royals slip past Seattle

SEATTLE - Bo Jackson hit two solo homers and scored the winning run in the ninth inning on a double by Jim Eisenreich as the Kansas City Royals beat the Seattle Mariners 5-4 Wednesday to snap a four-game losing streak.

Jackson led off the ninth against reliever Mike Jackson, 6-5, stole second and came around on Eisenreich's double. Mark Gubicza, 19-7, earned his fifth straight victory, allowing nine hits in 8 2-3 innings, striking out five and walking three. Israel Sanchez got the final out for his first save. Jackson hit his second homer of the game and 25th of the season to tie the score in the sixth.

'Kansas' paints typical small-town picture

Movie features state locations; K-Stater has role in show Southern accents not accurate

By Nancy Chartrand Arts/Entertainment Editor

I must preface this review with a confession: I love Kansas.

In my opinion, there is nothing more beautiful than the sun setting over a golden wheat field just prior to

The people here are friendly and, above all, "real."

With this is mind, I went to see the motion picture "Kansas" holding my breath, hoping that we Kansans would not be lumped together as poor, illiterate farmers.

Film Review

Well, I was slightly disappointed. But at the same time I do have to hand it to any director who has the guts to make a major motion picture and call it "Kansas."

"Kansas" tells the story of two very different young men - Doyle Kennedy, portrayed by Matt Dillon, and Wade Corey, portrayed by Andrew McCarthy. Their paths cross in — where else? — Kansas.

The picture begins with Wade traveling to New York to be the best man for one of his buddies. Along the way, his possessions and car are destroyed in a fire.

So he hops a freight train and meets Doyle, a Kansan with a criminal past, who tells him about a small Kansas town where they can stop and attend a Fourth of July celebration with free food and beer.

Wade agrees, and the adventures that he and Doyle have change his life forever.

Throughout the film, Australian director David Stephens has incorporated beautiful footage of wheat harvests, sunflower fields and other shots of Kansas countryside.

Most of the scenes in the picture were filmed near Lawrence.

I have no complaint with this. After all, if a movie is called "Kansas," pictures of wheat fields, not suburbs, are appropriate.

But I do have a slight problem with the depiction of Kansans as naive people with Southern accents.

According to Stephens, most Kansans have a Southern drawl.

I beg to differ. Correct me if I am wrong, but I don't think most Kansans say "y'all" on a regular basis. "Kansas" isn't a great movie, but it is a good movie. Dillon, who is prone to playing dark characters like Doyle, does a good job of adding an almost psychotic quality to his character as the movie progresses.

On the other hand, McCarthy tackled something new in his role of Wade. In previous movies, such as 'Class" and "Less Than Zero," he has played a college student.

"Kansas" is a picture about crime, love and heroes set in a state that producer George Litto describes as "the heartland of America. It's a place where people take care of each other, where a farmer wouldn't turn someone away if they needed a meal. It's a place of heroes, too."

Go see "Kansas" to see a good story, good acting and some beautiful footage of our state, and to hear references to some very familiar things like Topeka, KSN Topeka 27 News, and, of course, ... the University of Kansas.

That is exactly what happened.

In August 1987 Stout heard that a film called "Kansas," starring Matt

Dillon and Andrew McCarthy, was going to be shot around Lawrence.

So he decided to "knock on a few

Another K-State success story. Craig Stout graduated from K-State in 1986 with a degree in theater and then, two years later, landed a part in the new motion picture "Kansas."

Sounds pretty much like an overnight success story, right? Wrong. Soon after graduation, Stout decided to move to Dallas with his wife Kristi, whom he had married just two weeks after graduation.

Stout said there are four places for people in theater to go: New York, Chicago, Los Angeles and Dallas. He and his wife chose Dallas because they had friends from the K-

Dallas long. "I was still naive," Stout said. "I just wasn't very patient." So in late March 1987 Stout decided to move to Kansas City. To make ends meet, he took a job for several months as a car salesman, but finally decided to quit because he was "just not the car salesman type. "I had an agent that was looking

"My heart sank. Then she turned to me and said, 'And we want you for the patrolman.' We thought we were both auditioning for the same role. We didn't know they were casting two parts."

Stout said that just prior to filming he had been out of work so he had spent a lot of time sitting around the house watching television and

"Yeah, I tell everyone that I am the He talked to the assistant casting fat cop in 'Kansas,'" Stout joked. rector and left a resume with her. "I've lost a lot of weight since then. Actually, I have two scenes with speaking parts in the movie."

One of these scenes is with Matt Dillon.

"He kind of began like Mr. Cool but then he warmed up to the whole thing. It made the scene go better," Stout said. "He blew a few lines and then had more respect for me because I didn't screw up.

"Usually in your first movie your scenes end up on the cutting room floor. I was lucky my whole part as it

Music recital to feature students Actor

By The Collegian Staff

The Department of Music will sponsor its first recital today as part of its year-long Student Recital

The concert will be at 11:30 a.m. in All-Faiths Chapel. The concert will consist of individual pieces from music students, each of whom will perform one number. The concert is an hour-long, cumulative performance.

The students participating in the series are music and non-music majors. They are all enrolled in an applied studies class in their individual talents. There will be voice,

The music department also sponsors a general student recital the last Thursday of every month. The recitals are open to all students in the applied studies program, and participants are chosen by their teachers. The concerts are free and open to the public. K-State's music department also sponsors a guest artist and faculty artist series, she said.

Thursday have all auditioned in their accomplishments in the music studios, and have perfected their performance to the point where their large audience at Thursday's teachers feel they deserve the honor concert.'

"The General Student Recital Series culminates in an awards recital at the end of the year," she said. "Teachers in the music department select the best four to five individual student performances throughout the year. From these students, faculty select the winner of the Certificate of Excellence in Performance award.

Miller said the central area of the campus will be the priority for sprinkler systems, but eventually the majority of the grounds will have

Discrepancy may discount census

By Kendra Gensemer Collegian Reporter

Kansas census officials from the secretary of state's office met Thursday with Manhattan, Riley County and state-elected officials to discuss discrepancies between the 1978 and 1988 censuses.

Riley County had a population of 41,827 in 1978, according to census figures. The preliminary figures for the 1988 census show Riley County with a population of 34,093, indicating a decrease of 7,734 people.

However, Riley County officials say they are sure the county population has grown.

"The figures don't show it, but there is every indication that Riley County is growing with all the new housing developments, the increase in students ... there is no reason to think (the county's population has decreased)," said Wilton B. Thomas, Riley County commissioner.

Census officials say they are unsure of the reason for the discrepancy but believe use of different procedures may have had some

John Wine, assistant secretary of state, explained that a census procedure is how a census is counted, and a who to count and who not to count.

The procedure used in Kansas in 1988 did not count college students unless they abandoned their place of residence, he said.

"We do not know why there is a discrepancy," Wine said. "(In 1978) there wasn't a centralized way to conduct the census."

Wine said there are different types of censuses.

■ The federal census used in 1980 "counts bodies where it finds them," independent of where individuals had previously established residency.

■ The old state agricultural census used in 1978 let each county conduct a census within its own system.

■ The system used for the 1988 census did not count area college students or Fort Riley soldiers, unless they listed Riley County as their residence.

Joe Knopp, representative from Riley County and House majority party leader, said the wording of the census law is the same as it has been for the past 30 or 40 years.

"College students are presumed to be residents of their parents' (addresses). Military (personnel) are presumed to be residents where they entered the military," he said. "If they register to vote, or register in Riley County

U.S.'s Hispanic link forum panel topic

By The Collegian Staff

A panel of four K-State faculty discussed Hispanic influences on the United States in a pre-Convocation lecture forum Thursday in the Union.

Stewart Udall, the 37th Secretary of the Interior and a supporter of the tall grass prairie natural park system, will deliver the second fall Convocation lecture at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday in McCain Auditorium.

"The purpose of the (preconvocation) forums is to provide background for the speakers," said Convocation Lecture Chairwoman Peg Wherry. "We want to bring speakers to campus who have interesting ideas."

Panel moderator Jim Reichman, associate professor of biology, began the evening's celebration of Hispanic culture with a slide show. Utilizing maps and photographs of the Konza

Rene de la Padraja, assistant professor of history, discussed Spain's social legacy to Americans. Contrasting the differences between European and Western values, he said Spaniards lived "not as individuals, but as a community," while Anglos are generally more concerned with self.

"Many problems have assimilated in America today because of this contrast," de la Padraja said.

The cultural conflict was further debated by Doug Benson, associate professor of Spanish. He outlined some of the contributions Hispanics made to Americans, mentioning farming, ranching, weaving and mining techniques.

Senate questions South African ties

By Kendra Gensemer Collegian Reporter

Student Senate voted unanimously Thursday to establish a committee to investigate the possibility student funds are invested in companies doing business in South Africa.

Student monies are currently invested in a mutual fund called the Common Fund which puts money into various companies. Senate wants to find out if that money is going into companies with interests in South Africa.

"This is not doing anything permanent. It is part of the legislative process to question and that is what this bill is," said Rattan Nath, graduate student in physics and graduate student senator.

Senate carefully approved the bill after hearing a protest concerning a precedent violation by the student body president for establishing committees.

Sally Howard-Clayton, a former student senator, accused Student Body President Troy Lubbers of violating "all procedures that we have for setting up committees" when he "hand-picked the (Educational Opportunity Fund committee) that is going to decide what do to with $250,000."

Last week, the EOF committee met but has not officially been approved by Senate.

"When Student Senate says it invites student participation, it is tee without any advertising or search for the best-qualified," Howard-Clayton said.

Lubbers said Senate will address the status of the EOF committee in its meeting next week.

Graduate student senator Bernie Giefer, chemical engineering, offered an unofficial draft proposal for an athletic/activity student fee so that senators could find out student body opinion.

The unofficial draft proposal suggests a $12.50 fee per semester per undergraduate. Ten of that would go directly to the Athletic Department and $2.50 to club support fund.

Giefer said students contribute no money to the Athletic Department very hypocritical to form a commit- but the department wants to implement a fee of $15 per semester for all undergraduates. The proposal also would include > some benefits for students: A free season football ticket for fee-paying students, with lotteryassigned seating and priority to ICAT members. A three-year freeze on the level of the athletic/activity fee. A three-year freeze on the student season ticket price for men's basketball, and free admission to all other regular season intercollegiate activities on campus. The athletic department would spend the allocated funds at its discretion.

Higher enrollment brings benefits, problems

Increase leads state, largest since 1982

By Lisa Pfannenstiel Collegian Reporter

K-State's final enrollment figure for the fall semester peaked at 19,301 - the largest count since 1982.

The 1988 official "20th day of classes" figure is an increase of 1,252 students over last fall's 18,049, including a 12 percent increase in new freshmen.

"Enrollment numbers represent good news for K-State and the entire state," said President Jon Wefald, "We have not just stabilized (our enrollment numbers) but reversed in a very positive direction."

The quality of the 1988 freshman class is outstanding," Wefald said. "With 218 valedictorians and salutatorians, 150 Governor Scholars and 33 National Merit Scholars, K-State has done extraordinarily well, considering the recruitment competition included 44 schools."

Don Hoyt, director of planning and evaluating services, agreed with

"K-State is not only experiencing the biggest increase in Kansas, but one of the biggest in the Big Eight," Hoyt said.

Since 1985, K-State's enrollment has been in a recovery phase. The decline began in 1981 after enrollment peaked at 19,980 and continued snowballing until 1985. In those four years, K-State lost more than 2,400

"(Declining enrollment) was not an uplifting feeling," he said. "The rest of the world was not standing still, even though we were."

University planners face critical issues

By Lisa Pfannenstiel Collegian Reporter

Classrooms are packed, empty parking spaces are virtually nonexistent, and campus walkways are jammed with students hustling to

To some University officials, the continued growth in enrollment raises concerns about the planning and institutional advancement of K-State in the upcoming years.

Donald Hoyt, director of planning and evaluation services, predicted that within the next several years, K-State could experience an increase of 2,000 students, which would expand enrollment to about 21,000 students.

If the increases occur as forecast, the University can plan accordingly, Hoyt said, without any threat to the quality of education. For instance, class sections can be offered during early mornings and evenings to absorb the growth.

possible growth, Pat Bosco, associate vice president and dean of student life, forecast maintenance of the 1988 enrollment totals for the future.

Despite Hoyt's prediction of the "(K-State) would be hard-pressed to continue this kind of growth at the high school level," Bosco said. "The numbers are simply not there."

National trends predict lower numbers of entering freshmen due to the continued decreases in high school graduates until the 1990s, said Robert Grindell, head of the English department.

"K-State is going against the trend," Grindell said.

House passes drug bill

WASHINGTON - The House on Thursday passed election year anti-drug legislation that would severely punish recreational users and murderers alike, but it could face constitutional tests if enacted into law.

The 375-30 vote is not the final word on Congress' latest effort to respond to Americans' fears over drug abuse. The Senate still must consider its own anti-drug legislation, and a conference will likely be needed to reconcile competing Despite constitutional concerns, even by sponsors, the tug of election-year politics was so strong that House members appeared willing to enact the toughest possible bill and let the courts decide the legal questions later.

The bill received support from 207 Democrats and 168 Republicans, while all 30 votes against the legislation came from Democrats, virtually all of them liberals.

U.S. denies Ortega's charges

WASHINGTON - The State Department on Thursday denied charges that the administration blocked visas for most Nicaraguan officials who had wanted to attend the U.N. General Assembly starting next week, but Nicaraguan President Daniel Ortega canceled his trip because of visa problems, a spokesman said.

State Department spokesman Charles Redman had said earlier Thursday that U.S. officials normally require 15 working days for processing Nicaraguan visa applications but that the Sandinista officials made the request on Sept. 13 for a Sept. 24 arrival in New York. The assembly gets under way on Sept. 26. "We have not denied the Nicaraguans visas. We're processing their visas. The Nicaraguans applied late," Redman said. Of 60 visas requested, 30 have been expedited, including those of Ortega and his family and senior foreign ministry officials, Redman said. Other officials said the State Department is planning to approve the remaining visa requests on Oct. 4.

Shevardnadze brings proposals

WASHINGTON - With the Reagan administration's time running out, Soviet General Secretary Mikhail S. Gorbachev sought Thursday to give new momentum to arms control efforts by presenting the United States with a broad range of proposals to sharply reduce long-range nuclear weapons.

Although senior U.S. officials have virtually abandoned hopes for cutbacks in missiles, bombers and submarines of 30 percent to 50 percent as part of a new treaty, Gorbachev sent Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze here with suggestions for clearing two of the main roadblocks.

In addition, Gorbachev proposed in advance of Shevardnadze's visit that the two sides agree to adopt interim limits on the warheads that could be carried by U.S. and Soviet longrange missiles, a U.S. official said.

These would include a maximum of 10 warheads on American MX and Minuteman III missiles, 8 warheads on the submarine-launched Poseidon and 10 warheads on the SS20 and SS18 missiles, said the official, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Man goes on shooting spree

CHICAGO - A gunman killed two people Thursday in an auto parts store, then fatally wounded a police officer and a custodian at a nearby school before police shot the man dead,

A city garbage man also was wounded, as was a second police officer at the Montefiore School on the city's West Side, and it was the injured officer who gunned down the man, said Chicago Police Superintendent LeRoy Martin.

The dead police officer was Irma Ruiz, 40, a mother of four who had been on the force 12 years, Martin said.

The gunman, described by a friend as full of anger since his combat service in Vietnam, had a history of battery complaints and drug use, Martin said. "I'm assuming he may have had some type of grievance but I don't know.

"All the witnesses state that this individual never said a word" in the store before opening fire, Martin added.

The gunman, Clemie Henderson, 40, walked into the Comet Auto Parts store about 10 a.m. and shot and killed two clerks behind the counter, John Van Dyke, 41, and Robert Quinn, 26. Henderson missed a third clerk, who pretended to be hit and fell to the ground.

Sex survey results released

ATLANTA - A new survey released Thursday indicates that as many as 700,000 young American men may have at least 10 sex partners a year, putting them at "considerable risk" of sexually transmitted diseases including AIDS.

The national Centers for Disease Control reported that a survey of U.S. sexual habits shows that "most Americans appear to be at relatively low risk of infection" with the virus that causes AIDS, acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

"However, a sizeable percentage of young, never-married men report more than 10 partners in the past 12 months," including 5 percent of those 18-29.

The survey interviewed 1,481 people, asking them to write privately and submit anonymously their answers to four questions about their sexual habits.

BRIEFLY THE REGION

Inspectors study KNI

TOPEKA - Inspectors from the state Department of Health and Environment finished their survey of programs and conditions at Kansas Neurological Institute here Wednesday, but it will be at least next week before their report is complete.

Rumors that the second largest of Kansas' four treatment facilities for the mentally retarded had been "decertified" by the federal Health Care Financing Administration as a result of the survey are unfounded, said George Vega, special assistant to the commissioner of mental health and retardation services in the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services.

"Not only has it not been decertified, we don't even have a report yet" on what the inspectors found and corrections they recommend, said Vega.

Vega said SRS and HCFA will have to review the survey team's report before deciding what corrective measures will be needed to retain KNI's certification, if it is in jeopardy. The institution has 365 patients, about 95 percent of whom are severely retarded.

Looking for a job this semester? Chances are very good that you'll

"The job market for students on campus is great," said Larry Moeder, associate director of student financial assistance. "Employers are still looking for students to fill positions."

"Although there is nothing right now to base figures on, I believe the number of available jobs is up since last semester," Moeder said.

"I chose to work on campus rather than off mainly because of convenience," said April Milliken, junior in statistics. "Employers are more willing to work around your schedule if you work on campus." Milliken works in the statistics lab.

There are three types of student employment on campus: college work-study, which is awarded by the Office of Student Financial Assistance; campus payroll, which is equal to a student's unmet financial need; and graduate assistant- Moeder said. ships, which are granted by the various departments.

"The percentage of jobs that are work-study is very low," Moeder said, "only about 20 percent. The other 80 percent are basically campus payroll."

On-campus jobs require fewer than 30 hours per week of a student's time, and must pay at least minimum wage. The exact wages vary depending on the type of job.

For the student who is looking for full-time work, an off-campus job may be the answer. Area restaurants, retail stores and parents looking for child care are just a few of the possibilities.

"The main reason I'm working off campus is because I couldn't find anything on campus that both interested me and was related to my major," said Zach Cochran, senior in journalism and mass communications. Cochran is an on-air announcer for radio station KQLA.

"Many of these jobs start students well above minimum wage,"

Both on- and off-campus jobs are advertised on the student jobs notice board in the Union. The board is maintained by the Student Employment Center and lists jobs ranging from secretarial to food service work.

The Collegian also advertises both on- and off-campus employment opportunities. A statement that appears above this classified section advises students "to approach any such 'employment opportunity' with reasonable caution since the paper cannot verify the financial potential of these advertisements.'

The Manhattan Mercury publishes a similar statement above its employment section. Job opportunities in the newspaper range from bartenders to government positions to opticians.

"Although most of these jobs do not require previous experience, some of them do," Moeder said. "Usually the office/secretarial jobs require past experience."

It's the battle between the Kennebunkport-kid and the Massachusetts Maalox, said speaker Dale Van Atta about this year's presidential campaign.

Van Atta, one of the youngest and most widely syndicated columnists in the world, spoke as part of International Awareness Week, sponsored by the UPC Issues and Ideas Committee.

Van Atta shed new light on the two 1988 presidential candidates.

Van Atta began with Gov. Michael Dukakis, saying "he could qualify as a flaming liberal, but he doesn't flame at anything."

He then compared Dukakis to Jim-

He noted Bush's young Navy days and his projected image of the roughand-tumble Texan, adding Bush doesn't even live in Texas, but rather in Kennebunkport, Maine.

Van Atta said despite Bush's easy adjustment to the country's changes, he wasn't a great communicator or innovator.

"They're both decent and honorable but both talk around the issues." Van Atta said. "No matter what they say, taxes will be raised."

ging of America demands national action

balding man wearing a straw hat swings slowly in a rickety porch swing sipping lemonade. Neatly trimmed shrubs and hanging ferns complement a stark, white porch. Television commercials would lead us to believe this is how retirement will be.

But today's elderly, whose life expectancy is nearly 80 years, aren't subscribing to the quiet life. They want more out of retirement. They are the fastest growing population to date, which means today's young people are in for another attitude adjustment.

Marketing experts cannot ignore the elderly's spending power, which makes up more than half the country's discretionary income. Major corporations are after that income and have hired research teams to study senior consumers.

Experts are predicting a future with brighter lighting and larger print in newspapers and magazines. Buttons, jars and doorknobs, obstacles for those with arthritis, most likely will be transformed for the growing number of senior citizens. Huge industries will emerge to meet the needs of aging baby boomers.

Gray power is not a joke. Any candidate who would ignore groups such as the American Association of Retired Persons (with 28 million members) or the Gray Panthers (with 80,000 members) would be taking a major

McDonald's has created the McMasters program, a four-week job-training program for people over 50. The Travelers Insurance Company of Hartford saved more than $1 million a year by hiring back retired employees instead of paying fees to temporary Employers are finding their older employees to be more dependable, more dedicated and highly motivated. The point is - people older than 65 are an asset to our country. Their experience and insight are resources we cannot afford to lose. That is why it is so important to improve the quality of life for the elderly and their families.

One of Kansas' main problems is not having any kind of solid network of services for Commentary

After having spinal surgery, a 70-year-old woman comes home from the hospital and needs someone to help with ordinary daily tasks. For a short time, Medicare will help provide the short-term, in-home care, but will not be able to cover this care for any great length of time. Knowing this, her children, after making heroic efforts trying to care for her on their own, must resort to a nursing

Other than needing some help with everyday tasks, such as getting into the bathtub, cleaning and cooking, the woman is still capable of thinking clearly.

The average cost of a nursing home in Kansas is about $1,200 per month. After about three months of this costly care, 92 percent of elderly Kansans go on Medicaid (an individual must be at or below the poverty ansas' older than 65 population ranks 13th in the nation. Yet, when it comes to spending state dollars on the elderly, Kansas comes in at 46. In 1986, the state spent a total of $1.20 on every person 65 and older. The bordering states of Nebraska, Colorado and Missouri spent a little over $40 that year on those 65 and older. Iowa, which ranks fifth in its population of elderly, paid $24.20 per senior citizen that year.

Growing old is a subject most people like to avoid. It isn't pleasant to think of our healthy, young bodies becoming helpless within the next 50 years. State dollars need to be rerouted into setting up statewide programs providing affordable and accessible inhome care. Quality can be put back into the "golden years" — the growing, aging population will demand it.

Editor's Note: All of the facts concerning Kansas policies on aging came from the Area Council on

Not-for-resale books should be just that

Although many books sold in the Union and Varney's bookstores have stamps across their front saying "Review copy not for resale," they are sold anyway.

Publishers say they have no control over the books' resale. Bookstore officials say they paid for the books without knowing they were review copies, so they have the right to sell them. Professors say they didn't request the books, so they have the right to dispose of the books in any way.

It seems that someone's ethics are sleeping on the job. Granted, if a professor receives complimentary books without asking for them, he or she shouldn't have to buy storage space to stockpile them. Selling an occasional unsolicited book is harmless.

Some instructors write to the book companies requesting review copies, review them, then turn around and sell the books. These instructors are the ones who should step back and re-evaluate the situation.

When "jobbers," textbook company representatives, come around to the University offering to buy complimentary copies, professors should remember they originally requested the book because they were interested in the material it offered - not in making a profit.

The professors make a 100 percent profit on books for which they paid nothing. Textbook publishers have to raise the original price of textbooks in order to compensate for the cost of printing and distributing free copies. So, when the books return to campus, they are more expensive than they would have to Professors can request any book at any time and use it for no other reason than to sell; then they pocket the profit.

The book companies should alter the copy of complimentary books so that professors could decide on the books' effectiveness without having a resellable text. Leave out a chapter, index or table of contents.

Make the review copy precisely that — a review copy not a regular text with a stamp on the front saying, in essence, "Please don't sell this. I am for promotional reasons only."

Volleyball's success rates campus support

K-State's volleyball team deserves a big high five for getting this season off to the best start in school history. Its 8-0 record is a pleasant change from the football team's dismal 0-3

So much emphasis and bad press has been placed on the football team's performance that many students are unaware of the talents found on the volleyball team.

For a mere $2 — opposed to $8 or $13 for a football ticket - students can witness what Coach Scott Nelson is calling the best team he's coached in the nine years he's been at K-State. Considering that his 1987 team shattered 23 records, you can be sure that this team will provide some fast-paced, exciting volleyball action.

Yes, all the die-hard football fans should keep up their support for the team that plays football. But let's not forget to show purple pride for the team that plays volleyball - and

Other Perspectives

Students bored with traditional intramural sports should take note - underwater hockey is finding its way to Midwestern universities, according to the National On-Campus Report. Although the sport is more popular in Europe, students at Ohio State and Illinois are forming six-player underwater teams. Wearing fins, snorkels and diving masks, and holding 12-inch sticks, players try to push the puck - slightly larger than an ice-hockey puck - into the opponent's goal. It's not an easy feat, either.

Students ignored

I applaud the editorial in Monday's Collegian regarding the Gala at Bramlage and echo its sentiments. I was one of the students who voted for the new arena 12 years ago and there are two issues which were raised during the debate that stick in my mind.

The first is that the new arena would eliminate the need for students to camp out to get tickets and would make the games more accessible. The second was that the money put up by the students would have some strings attached in that there would be consideration for the quality and quantity of student seating. Now, instead of camping out for two weeks at the football stadium as was done the year we voted on the arena, students are camping out a month prior to ticket sales and from what I've read in your paper, student seating comprises less than half the capacity of the new arena, with the choice seats going to non-student groups.

I moved out of the state shortly after we voted, so I'm not familiar with what political shenanigans were used to defraud the students, but it is apparent that once the athletic department found a patsy to fund its new arena, all the commitments to the students were soon forgotten. Once again, the students and the vast majority of the alumni are treated as poor relatives and athletic department officials pander to well-to-do alumni in a manner that reminds me of girls on Lake Street in Chicago. Perhaps, using their convoluted logic, they decided that all the students who voted back then are now rich alumni and the officials are just looking out for their interests. Were this not a state operation, the state Attorney General would have stepped in and our money would have been returned.

The truly sad part is that I see few students stepping forward to hold the athletic department accountable and to protect the investment we have made. Students have few advocates on campus but it seems that one of them should be the campus newspaper. I'd like to see a history of how we got into the position we're in with this arena. If my guess is right, it should prove to be an interesting study in political maneuvering. It disgusts me that the first function that the new arena will host is an exclusive dog and pony show. I would be much happier if they would have an open house for the students before the Gala so we could see what we have paid for, because the way things sound, it may be the only chance for many of us to see the inside of the building.

Ban male bonding

Editor,

This is in reference to Mark Schmeller's column "Insight into the subtleties of male bonding." After Schmeller admitted he didn't only fill the air with dust. really have a column for the week, why did he have to prove it?

Who is paying this male to write? I hope his wages don't come from my tuition. If his commentary was meant to be sarcastic, why wasn't it written that way, instead of just toying with the idea and juxtaposing it with the sad reality of closed-minded individuals?

I know several Percys and even a few Elliots and they all seem to do just fine in the male bonding arena, while only a small percentage of these men exclusively do not date women. And while we're on that subject, would it shock you, Mr. Schmeller, to be assured that Plato would've found a certain ambiguity in the process of "male bonding?" Open your eyes and leave Bill Cosby alone.

If my letter has inspired another party, who may also be plagued by an insecurity in regard to his or her masculinity, to write on this subject, keep one thing in mind: When the dirt has been raked, a gust of wind will

The focus is to maintain and stabilize the (undergraduate enrollment) and increase numbers in nontraditional areas, such as continuing education and graduate programs, Bosco said, adding that the University will also strive for modest increases in its out-of-state market.

The recruitment effort of K-State admission representatives is one segment of President Wefald's enrollment management plan that will not change, Hoyt said.

In years prior to the employment of the admission counselors, K-State recruited 24 percent of the students who submitted their ACT scores. The additional recruitment effort by the representatives yielded a 7 percent increase in enrollment of seniors submitting their ACT scores, he said. "We expect to receive 31 percent again," Hoyt said. "How well the personal touch works is unbelievable," said Julie DaPron, senior admissions representative. From the end of September until Christmas, the representatives will be on the road 90 percent of the time, DaPron said. Their travels will include personal visits to high school and college career nights. The emphasis is to recruit the top students from all 105 counties of Kansas, Bosco said. In addition to Kansas, targets will include Missour-Nebraska, Colorado and Illinois.

"Those are the four out-of-state areas we are concentrating on to increase the non-resident enrollment, which is currently 15 percent," Bosco said.

Bosco said the new market is Chicago, Ill. and its suburbs. K-State is targeting the suburbs of the outlying areas for several reasons: students from these suburbs have a high propensity to investigate out-of-state universities; K-State's non-resident fees are competitive to Illinois' in-state tuition; and many college-bound students live in the suburbs and North Shore areas, he said.

In an effort to increase the quality of recruits, the University is offering more scholarships to the most outstanding students, Bosco said.

As the student numbers continue to increase, the University must respond to the changes, Hoyt said. "(K-State) will have to limp through the bulges of the next couple of years, because funding does not catch up with enrollment until 1991,"

During the next several years, the faculty will have to absorb many of the extra responsibilities, Hoyt said. Predicted enrollment increases can be met with additional faculty

This year, K-State tried to offset the enrollment increase by hiring several faculty members, but problems developed when the enrollment exceeded the predicted increases, he

President Wefald is reviewing the incremental budgeting of each department and is planning to strategically reallocate internal funds to the departments experiencing the greatest growth and the greatest need of upgrading, Hoyt said.

A small amount of increased housing will be created through upgrading Van Zile Hall, but most of the additional living spaces will be created through development in the private sector as needs arise, he said.

With the increase in numbers, students may experience less personal contact with their instructors, which can have a negative impact, he said.

"However, the concern is overestimated. Seventy percent of the success of the student's performance lies in how (the student) attacks it," Hoyt

"Everything is not perfect," said Myrna James, admissions representative. Parking problems, limited housing and the stress on faculty and students are all areas that must be addressed, she said.

If the faculty can't do anything about the student's problem, they can offer assistance, she said.

"The goal is to get the students here and then keep them here. We have developed a respect program to help each other. This is a campusand community-wide effort," she

From the moment workers arrive, it is business as usual. Working as diligently as possible, they sort, pound and wrap products to meet their contract deadlines.

The mood is energetically positive, as employees talk to co-workers and joke around.

This business is typical of most businesses in the community. Except these workers are disabled.

Located on the east side of town, Big Lakes Developmental Center Inc. provides services to stimulate, encourage and support a normalized lifestyle for developmentally disabled individuals.

As proof of their independence, some of the employees at Big Lakes will be selling plants and wood products at the Flinthills Festival today through Sunday in City Park.

Big Lakes was incorporated in January 1973 through the combined efforts of the Geary County Association of Retarded Citizens and the Federation for Handicapped Citizens

Before centers such as Big Lakes were created, families with disabled individuals had to make a choice between placing the disabled family members in institutions or keeping them at home.

"The basic philosophy is that people's lives should not be interfered with," said Sue Frady, community relations coordinator for Big Lakes. "If it is necessary to intervene, it should be done in the least restrictive way possible."

Big Lakes is currently serving 175 mentally and physically disabled children and adults in Riley, Geary, Clay and Pottawatomie counties. Frady said.

The overriding goal of Big Lakes is for each of its clients to live as independently as possible in mainstream society, according to its

It strives to "facilitate the growth and development of the mentally retarded," said Mike Brodersen, workshop manager. "We provide the opportunity for individuals to work in a sheltered environment at their own speed. This gives the individuals a certain sense of dignity and builds their self-esteem, while at the same time, (they are) earning a paycheck."

Big Lakes gives disabled incentives, independence

Employment helps the disabled individuals become aware of their capabilities, he said, giving them a sense of worth and accomplishment. It also teaches responsibility and nurtures self-respect and selfconfidence.

Big Lakes offers three basic programs - children's services, adult vocational services and residential services.

The children's program is different from that at a "regular" preschool because employees at Big Lakes are trained, certified and equipped with experience to meet the needs of children with disabilities.

Services are provided for children up to the age of 5, Brodersen said. The center is designed to help children enter public schools when they are kindergarteners.

The teaching philosophy of the center is that although the children are developmentally disabled, they can learn, he said. It just may take them longer than other children.

The adult vocational program serves people 16 years and older. Upon admittance in the program, an individual plan for each client is set up. Communication skills, basic work habits, social maturity, academic levels, physical disabilities and reasoning abilities are tested to determine the best work environment for individuals.

The residential program gives individuals a chance to live in normal settings in the community with needed support and assistance. The individuals are taught to live as independently as possible.

The residential program is licensed to serve 41 individuals at three skill levels: the group home, the duplex and the apartment. These facilities are located in Manhattan.

"The biggest highlight of the year has been the opening of a new group home," Frady said. "We were able to expand our services by seven people, which is really pretty good. As of now, there are 625 individuals in Kansas on waiting lists for residential homes," she said.

Big Lakes purchased a home with a grant awarded to it by the Kansas Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services-Mental Health and Retardation Services. Frady said seven women moved into the home on June 1.

A Big Lakes staff member stays in each of the group homes 24 hours a day. In duplexes, staff members contact the members on a daily basis. Those living in apartments are visited by a supervisor about three times a week.

Depending on what level the individual is, Frady said, he or she can be released from the program. Individuals in the residential program are better able to cope than the other clients at Big Lakes, but they progress slower because they do not have intense supervision.

Big Lakes is a private, non-profit, community-based agency that contracts work for local businesses, such as Parker Hannifin Corporation and McCall Patterns, providing jobs for the disabled.

"We are contracted by other businesses and provide them with a number of services, such as packaging wooden products, construction, mailing operations, general assembly and janitorial services," Brodersen

"If it were not for the many companies that provide work for us, we would not be here," he said. The K-State baseball team and Sigma Chi fraternity also contribute to the agency by sponsoring a fundraising activity in which fraternity members collect pledges for each run scored by the team during the fall

The disabled men and women at Big Lakes sell their wooden crafts and plants to benefit the center.

"The first Friday of each month we have a craft sale," Frady said. "Not too many people know about these because of our location."

'Sweet' falls short of sincerity

The excitement and charge of into film star seeing singing, dancing, and good Vittorio Vidal acting in one night pumped through my veins as I waited for a friend to pick me up.

I hummed and occasionally broke into the lyrics of "Big Spender," one of many songs from the musical "Sweet Charity." It won four Tonys in 1986, including Best Musical Revival.

Unfortunately, the version which appeared Thursday night in McCain Auditorium probably would not Playing to an almost full house, 3D Productions brought excitement and just as much disappointment to this toe-tapping audience member and several other McCain patrons.

The story centers around Charity Hope Valentine, a taxi dancer, who has the hopes of finding a life of leisure and comfort away from the drudges of the Fandango Ballroom where she works.

Quite by accident, she bumps and his companion Ursula Marsh who are in the middle of a big fight.

Charity sees an opportunity, seizes the moment and tricks Vidal into taking her to his apartment.

Disappointed by Vidal and Ursula's reconciliation, she decides to leave the Fandango and find a new life at the YMCA. While in a broken-down elevator, Charity falls in love with Oscar Lindquist, an accountant.

She hides her sordid past from him, afraid that it will scare him away. As in most nice musicals, the two confront the conflict and reach a mutual understanding.

The Book by Neil Simon lacks Charity, though, can't seem to resolution, exploiting the happilying Charity right where she began. As the overture began, a medley Everything was going well until Connors spoke. Her shrill and a lot of a Muppet. The lady sitting next to me commented that she sounded like Snuggles, the obnoxious softener mascot. This is not to say that Connors could not sing. She lit the stage with both her versatile voice and dancing ability. Much to my despair, though, her acting ability did not lend itself to portraying a Charity Hope Valentine whom the audience could honestly like.

It is exactly this quality which makes Charity a character with whom the audience can empathize.

Instead, she played the crowd for laughs. Simpson would have had the audience in the aisles if she had not known exactly how funny the lines really were.

Although she settled into the role

Much to Connors' detriment, the production seemed to be plagued with technical problems.

When the audience could see her feet, the energy vibrated the auditorium. Unfortunately, the spotlight operators missed Connors' and other principal characters' feet during big dance scenes.

Sandra L. Simpson, who played Nickie, and Marlea Vega Montalvo, who played Helene, were wonderful in their portrayals of Charity's taxi-dancing cohorts.

Honest despair bled as the two sang "Baby Dream Your Dream," which not only showed how trapped the two were, but became the most honest and poignant moment of the performance.

Simpson was especially believable and multi-talented. She is listed as standby for the role of Charity, and I think the production would have benefited if she had played it.

Bill Hunter, lighting designer, attempted to use the touring company's state-of-the-art lighting equipment to enhance the scenes, but fell short of the mark.

Vandalism in K-State residence halls is much lower in comparison to other universities.

Because of this, K-Staters must pay fewer expenses, said Thomas Frith, director of housing.

Despite the lower vandalism rate, incidences still occur in some of the residence halls.

"Some years are better than others," said Gene Wiley, Depart- to $120 depending upon the ment of Maintenance superintendent. "When (enrollment was low) there was a higher rate of vandalism."

Much of the vandalism, Wiley said, comes from ignorance on students' part. The types of damage done by students ranges from putting too many people on the elevators or holding the doors open as they're about to close.

"In the past there has (been more problems with co-ed halls), and I don't know why," he said. Non-negligent forms of van-

Each residence hall has a social and educational fund which is used to pay for damage to residence hall property by students. When damage does occur, money is taken out of this fund, which could mean less money for social functions throughout the year.

Vandalism can be a problem in cases where students are late in sending in their housing contract and are placed in a hall that they don't particularly like. This creates a tendency for them to create problems, Wiley said.

Martini said the swim meet and the track meet, which will be in the spring, are the top attractions of the intramural sporting events, partly because of the quality of the competitors.

Some of the best intramural swimmers in the nation hail from K-State, Martini said.

"It is pretty neat to see some of the national record holders in intramural swimming come from K-State," he said.

Though the participation hasn't increased much in the last couple of years, Martini said the event should grow in the future.

Volleyball team to challenge national powers

By The Collegian Staff

There's nothing like a trip to Nebraska to test one's volleyball skills, and the undefeated K-State Wildcats have headed north to participate in the Nebraska Invitational.

Aside from perennial national power the University of Nebraska, the tournament will feature the University of Wyoming, ranked 19th in the country, and the University of Indiana from the Big Ten Conference.

K-State will open the tournament at 5:30 p.m. Friday against Indiana. Saturday morning, the 'Cats will meet the host Comhuskers at 10:30 before finishing with Wyoming at six that night.

"When you play good opponents, basically it's a measuring stick on where your program is at," Nelson said. "The tournament will tell us exactly where our program is at."

So far, K-State is a perfect 8-0, which is the best start ever by a Wildcat team. Only once this season have 1984-87.

the 'Cats been forced to a fifth game, and for the first time in the school's history, the team is ranked nationally. The Wildcats are No. 8 in the Mideast Region of the Tachikara Coaches Poll.

On the national level, K-State's service ace average of 3.3 service aces per match has the squad fifth in that category nationally.

Individually, Lynda Harshbarger ranks third with 1.15 aces per match, and is well on her way to breaking the single-season service ace record. Harshbarger has 35 after just nine games. The record was set last season by Kristi Jacquart with 87.

Also, Mary Kinsey is just nine service aces away from a career record. The 5-foot-10 senior outside hitter had three aces in Tuesday's threegame win against the University of Missouri-Kansas City. The K-State record is 167, set by Jacquart,

K-State harriers to initiate season

By The Collegian Staff

The K-State men's and women's cross country teams are scheduled to open their season Saturday at Emporia, but coach John Capriotti isn't has several of his top runners back overly excited.

"I really don't expect a lot of competition from the teams there," Capriotti said. "We are basically going into this meet to see where we are at. Our goal is to see how our kids run against each other and see who our top runners are.

"I'm really interested to see how we stack up against each other," he added. "It has been real close without any competition."

The women will be running a 5,000-meter race at 10 a.m. The men will start their five-mile race at 10:45

The K-State men are hoping to benefit this season from the redshirt plan Capriotti used last year. He now this season, including five who ran on the 1986 team, which qualified for nationals.

The women will be without the services of their top runner from last season, Laura Haggerty. She has been unable to come back from her stress fracture injury. Laura Ostmeyer will also be out due to a stress fracture. The women's success now lies on the runners who come to the front of the pack.

"The women are training well," Capriotti said. "We've lost a couple of runners, but we still have a good

Olympic Briefly

By The Associated Press

SEOUL, South Korea - Byun Jong-il sat 67 minutes in a boxing ring Thursday, trying to understand the nine minutes of fighting that went before and the 4-1 decision that followed, the two penalty points that went against him and what they may have cost him.

But no matter how hard or how many times Byun tried, whether he sat in the glaring lights or the glowing dark, the numbers just wouldn't add up. Which explains, perhaps, how he could have begun Thursday full of fancy and just 19, and ended it feeling all of 90 and looking for a place to bury those dreams.

"He is sleeping, it is better that he sleeps," a member of the Korean Olympic delegation who identified himself only as Mr. Chun, said in a telephone interview from the athletes' village early Friday.

"He feels that he won the game and so he sits in protest. Now, it is better that he sleeps for a while," he continued. "His problem has ended." Actually, it may just be beginning.

And the problem is no longer just his. Byun, a bantamweight, was suspended indefinitely from competi-

Boxing Association (AIBA), and may not box again for years. Five South Korean officials - one an assistant coach and another a trainer - who took part in the punchkick-and ear-pulling attack on referee Keith Walker following the decision were thrown out of their own Olympics by the AIBA.

And Walker, who assessed the penalty points against Byun for butting in his morning bout against Bulgarian Alexandar Hristov, is heading home to New Zealand and early retirement.

"Walker had said this (Olympics) would probably be his last anyway," said Paul Thompson, a member of

"But," Thompson added, "this is a sad way to end a career."

As Thompson spoke to reporters at the close of the evening session, Australian boxer Darrell Hiles stood nearby, nodding and dabbing a towel on the nasty gash Korean boxer Lee Jae-hyuk had opened moments earlier — also by butting. Lee won 5-0.

"I think (what happened) this morning affected Darrell's mind," said teammate Darren Obah, unsolicited. "We noticed it in the first round. It was kind of scary out there.

And even before the Byun-Hristov fight Korean newspapers had stoked the locals with accounts of how U.S. officials were lobbying against Korean boxers.

According to the stories, the Americans were still upset over the elimination earlier this week of middleweight Anthony Hembrick, who missed the bus, arrived too late for his fight against Ha Jong-ho of South Korea and was disqualified.

Before the Hembrick fiasco, the Koreans were undefeated. They lost four straight after, the last being Byun.

Sports Briefly

Tennis team to open season

The K-State women's tennis team opens its season today and Saturday at the Collegiate Women's Tennis Invitational in Salina.

Joining the Wildcats in the tournament are Wichita State University, Iowa State University and the University of Nebraska. "We are really anxious to get some matches under our belt and establish some basic things, such as taking a look at some new doubles teams," Coach Steve Bietau said.

Crew to defend regatta title

K-State's varsity men's crew will defend its title Saturday at the Head of the Des Moines River Regatta in Des Moines. Also competing will be an eight-woman team and a mixedeight crew. The Manhattan High School team will compete in the college freshmen men's and women's fours, and the mixedeight races.

"We've won the championship for the past three years, ... (but since) it's a three-mile race it's going to be a tough mental and physical grind," Coach Don Rose said.

Tourney to stay in Kemper

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - The Big Eight Conference will keep its basketball tournament in Kansas City for at least three more years after next season.

The tournament has been played at Kansas City's Kemper Arena since its inception in 1977, and the current agreement runs through March 1989.

Radio station airs from mall booth

By Alan Wilds Collegian Reporter

The sound of Power 94.5 radio can occasionally be heard coming from Manhattan Town Center because the station recently placed a trial broadcast booth in the mall.

The station's booth is a result of the City of Manhattan considering a public bus system, said Christopher Heavey, mall manager.

Town Center was asked to produce schedules and promotions for the system. But due to the high cost of promotions, Heavey said he believed the mall would be better off providing a temporary lease to a radio station. In exchange, the station would promote the bus system as part

E. Hwy. 24

(21/4 miles east of the Mall)

The bus system has been placed on the "back burner," Heavey said, but the radio station moved in last week. "We now have a radio station inside here that was geared toward an original purpose which no longer exists," he said.

The station will draw traffic to the mall, although the primary objective is no longer there, Heavey said.

The broadcast booth will provide the Junction City-based station with a stronger connection in the Manhattan area, said Dave Wiese, operations director for Power 94.5.

"(The station has) a signal that covers the Manhattan area, but because our main studio is in Junction City, the mall studio will provide us with more visibility in Manhattan," Wiese said.

The studio will be equipped with a news and sales department, enabling the station to do more promotional activites in the area, Wiese said.

"The station will be able to promote activities in the community and in the Town Center," Heavey said. The station has a temporary lease of 23 weeks, as an experiment to see how well it will work, he said. "If there is a way we can make the two gel, there is a possibility that it could be here on a permanent basis," Heavey said, adding that the station would probably be moved to a section of the mall reserved for businesses. "Keep in mind (the mall is) both a retail and an office complex, so there is the possibility of a business such as a radio station, doctor's office, accounting firm or some other kind of business existing here," he said.

If things work out, he said he would be glad to negotiate with the station on a permanent arrangement.

Mall officials are requiring the station to broadcast at least once a week from the mall, but it is free to broadcast as often as it wants, Heavey said.

"It can (broadcast) five days a week if it wants, but it has to be here on Friday, Saturday or Sunday," he said. This Friday, the station will broadcast its grand opening from the mall until midnight.

Heavey said he anticipates a lot of live broadcasts.

Wright denies CIA secrets revealed

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON -House Speaker Jim Wright denied Thursday that he revealed anything classified when he criticized a covert CIA operation in Nicaragua, while Republicans pressed for formal ethics and intelligence investigations of the speaker's remarks.

Wright, who has become a lightning rod for Democrats on Central America policy, found himself again embroiled in controversy for his revelation two days earlier that the Central Intelligence Agency had instigated demonstrations aimed at provoking the leftist Managua government and sabotaging peace talks with the Contra rebels.

The speaker repeated that assertion to reporters, but contended such CIA activity was already well known through news

"I didn't say anything that was revealed to me as classified information," said Wright, D-Texas.

"K-State's reputation was suffering," said Don Foster, University registrar.

Programs which had been in high demand and very visible in earlier years began to wane in interest and diminish in importance.

New programs began to grow and dominate, but K-State was not in a very responsive position, he said. "It was the comfort of the past and the unwillingness to plan that dynamically kept K-State from growing," Hoyt said.

However, under the new enrollment management program and the efforts of academic deans, faculty and alumni, K-State has changed its image and enrollment has increased,

he said.

K-State was not the only university to experience an enrollment increase this fall.

Enrollment figures from all Board of Regents schools except the University of Kansas were also available this week.

Wichita State University experienced an increase of 215 students for a final enrollment of 17,267.

WSU attributes its increase to additional recruitment efforts within the past two years, said Joe Kleinsasser, media relations coordinator at WSU.

"We have seen a great increase in new freshman numbers, and people in the community are participating in more classes," Kleinsasser said.

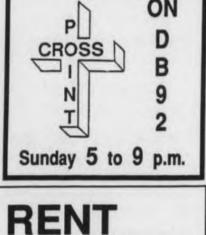

Fort Hays State University experienced a decrease of 131 students, despite an increase of 29 new freshmen. The final enrollment was 5,005.

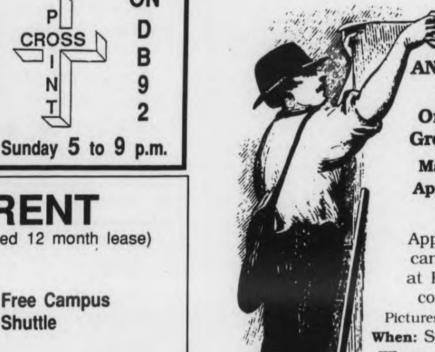

KU's official enrollment will not be available until next week because its classes began one week later than the other regent universities.

Robin Eversole, director of university relations for KU, said approximate figures of the 1988 final enrollment were not available.

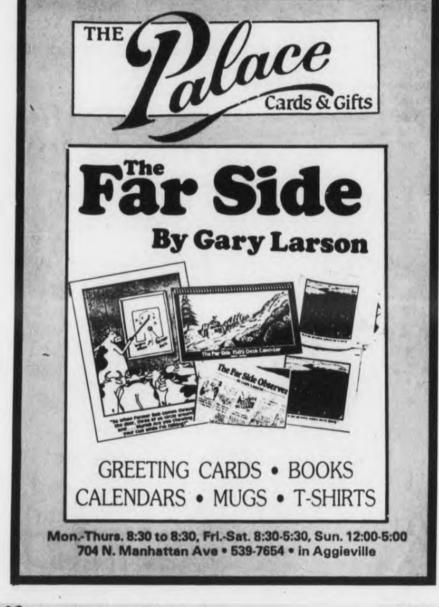

"There is no way we can speculate (KU's) final enrollment numbers until the data is compiled," Eversole

Design students take break from traditional studio

Castle builders compete

By Kendra Gensemer Collegian Reporter

K-State architecture students will do just about anything to get out of studio, especially if their professors permit it.

Usually the studios are filled with student architects who are designing their hearts away, dreaming of life outside those all-too-familiar walls. But last Friday afternoon those rooms were empty. In another place far, far away, those design-crazed students gathered. They had driven many miles, endured drizzling rain, and weathered the cold. To do what? To build sand castles.

They were there to compete in the sixth annual Sand Castle Charrette, sponsored by the K-State American Institute of Architecture Students. Organizers estimated about 150 students competed in the charrette.

"Charrette" is a French word for "a very quick design solution," said Jeff Ellison, senior in architecture and co-president of AIAS. The contest was at Broken Arrow Ranch, about 40 miles north of Manhattan on Tuttle Creek Reservoir and "is a service that we provide to the students," Ellison said.

It began like the Oklahoma land dio," said Scott Fears, junior in landrun, everyone staking claims for sand, marking boundaries.

Other imaginative sculptures ranged from a Volkswagen Bug to two sunbathers on the Riviera to a "post-neo pre-Colombian" castle, as described by its creator, Richard Schluemer, senior in architecture.

"It was great," said Mike Barolak, senior in interior architecture. "In the past years it hasn't been like this. This year there was a lot of competition."

And, after it was all over, they all went back to studio.

assesses doctor fees Study

By The Associated Press

BOSTON - A long-awaited study being released this week could dramatically change the way doctors are paid, sharply reducing fees for many kinds of operations while raising charges for office visits.

The study has been the object of intense speculation and apprehension in the medical world since it was undertaken 21/2 years ago by economist William C. Hsiao of the Harvard University School of Public Health.

The massive project attempts to determine the amount of work involved in everything doctors do from checkups and well-baby visits to brain surgery and coronary bypasses — so they can be paid what their services are worth.

There is widespread agreement, Hsiao said, "that the current payment system is unworkable. The fees are distorted and inequitable."

Hsiao's plan, requested by Congress, will try to correct that. It would pay physicians more for the time they spend thinking about patients, examining them and talking to them and less for specific procedures.

In an interview, Hsiao said that if adopted by government health agencies and insurance companies, his 2,000-page plan could have a profound effect on the nation's health care system. Among other things, it could:

■ Improve care by encouraging doctors to spend more time with their patients.

■ Lower medical costs by discouraging expensive tests, procedures and operations. Increase the number of doctors willing to specialize in family practice and other kinds of primary care. Lower the income of some surgical specialists while raising the pay

Bush, Dukakis take positions on key issues Drugs, deficit discussed Presidential debate presents

By The Associated Press

WINSTON-SALEM, N.C. -George Bush and Michael Dukakis clashed over deficits, drugs and the Pledge of Allegiance in a crackling campaign debate Sunday night. Bush said, "I hope people don't think I'm questioning his patriotism," but Dukakis retorted that he was and added. "I resent it."

Bush sought repeatedly in the 90-minute debate to depict Dukakis as a liberal Democrat who is "out there out of the mainstream." Dukakis challenged the vice president's judgment and ticked off a string of what he called Reagan administration failures, with emphasis on the Iran-Contra affair.

He said it was a "tragedy" for the president to sell arms to Iran in exchange for hostages, and said Bush endorsed the deal.

The vice president replied, "Yes, we shouldn't trade arms for hostages, but we have made vast improvements in our anti-terrorism." Some hostages were freed during the arms dealing with Iran, but others were seized and nine Americans remain in

A question about Republican vice presidential candidate Dan Quayle brought another lively exchange. Bush defended his youthful running mate, said he had been subjected to unfair speculation and added, "he has my confidence." Dukakis guessed that "for most people the notion of President Quayle is a very, very troubling notion.'

The vice president and the Massachusetts governor shook hands at center stage before the debate and again after. "Good job," Dukakis said to his Republican rival after their give-no-quarter 90 minutes on stage.

Both men then headed for postdebate rallies with supporters while their political supporters descended on reporters to offer partisan analysis of the confrontation.

"I enjoyed it. I thought it was a good night," Dukakis said. Asked if he won, he replied, "People seemed to be pretty enthusiastic."

stances despite poor format

By Michael Nichols Government Editor

If anyone watching the debate between George Bush and Michael Dukakis expected clashes and clearcut stances on major issues, they certainly got what they were looking for.

"I was pleasantly surprised," said Charles Griffin, assistant professor of speech. "It was a good, tough confrontation with a lot of give-and-

Edward Schiappa, assistant professor of speech, complained about the format of the debate.

"The format is horrible," Schiappa said. "You can't try to cover a dozen or so issues with one or two-minute Griffin agreed, pointing out that the format emphasizes "quickness on your feet, as opposed to reflection. "It's absurd to expect the candidates to spell out their positions (on issues) in one or two minutes," he said. "I would like to see a longer response time."

David Proctor, assistant professor of speech specializing in political communication, said he was disappointed with both candidates. "Governor Dukakis did sound like a 'passionless technocrat,'" he said. "He was too fast, used too many technical terms and didn't explain things well enough."

Grateful Dead sings for charity

NEW YORK - Members of the Grateful Dead, those rock 'n' roll icons from the psychedelic counterculture of the late '60s, have joined the concerts-for-causes circuit.

The band, which played at the legendary Woodstock festival and has been a rock mainstay for 23 years with songs like "Steel Magnolia," "Casey Jones," and "Uncle John's Band," joined Bruce Hornsby and the Range, Suzanne Vega, and Daryl Hall and John Oates on stage Saturday night to raise money to protect tropical rain forests.

The group pledged to make fighting deforestation a lifelong commitment. "We'll probably be doing this until we're pushing up daisies," said rhythm guitarist Bob Weir.

Lead guitarist Jerry Garcia, the Dead's spiritual guru, said he's concerned about the world his children will inherit.

"For me, this is one of those things that 20 years ago there were people who were talking about how dire all this stuff was then. And the alarming part is, nothing has happened in between. ... It is up to regular people, which we think we are, to do something about this," he said.

Balloon attracts suitors

WALNUT CREEK, Calif. - Anita O'Hearn has come up with a not-so-subtle way to attract suitors: a huge balloon tethered to a building by a heavily traveled interstate that reads, "MARRY ME!!! INTERESTED?"

The 12-foot by 10-foot balloon floating along Interstate 680 near this San Francisco Bay area city also sports a painting of a platinum blonde in a black velvet dress reclining on a red couch — and O'Hearn's phone number.

A call to that number gets a tape-recorded voice of O'Hearn singing "The Man I Love."

Callers also get a letter and a questionnaire from O'Hearn, who describes herself as the over-40, 250-pound, almost 6-foottall "blonde on the balloon." She says she is a professional singer, comedian, writer and entrepreneur.

"If you are still interested and would love a woman who just fell, fully clothed, out of a Rubens painting ... read on," she said in her letter.

O'Hearn said recently that she's gotten 20 calls so far.

Hurricane Helene heads north

MIAMI - Hurricane Helene strayed farther from land as it continued pushing north Sunday over the central Atlantic Ocean, heading toward chillier water that eventually will sap its strength, forecasters said.

Helene turned from north-northwest to north and was moving at 8 mph, said Hal Gerrish of the National Hurricane Center.

At 6 p.m. EDT, the storm's center was near latitude 21.5 north and longitude 49.0 west, or about 1,585 miles southwest of the westernmost Azores. Its top sustained winds were 105 mph, down from 115 mph at noon.

"Some gradual weakening is possible during the next day or two," Gerrish said.

Hurricanes are comprised of strong winds revolving around warm cores of low pressure fueled in part by the tropical waters that spawn them. Cold water weakens the storms, draining their steam.

If Helene stays on its northerly course, it eventually will will die out at sea, unlike Gilbert, which turned its deadly winds west and grew into a category 5 hurricane — the strongest

Billy Carter dies at age 51

PLAINS, Ga. - Billy Carter, the former "first brother" whose beer drinking, candor and business ventures amused and sometimes embarrassed the Carter administration, died Sunday of pancreatic cancer. He was 51.

William Alton Carter III married his high school sweetheart, Sybil, and joined the Marines. He expanded the family peanut business into a $5 million a year operation that was placed in trust while his brother Jimmy was president.

He put his name on a brand of beer that flopped, got into hot water with remarks denounced as racist or anti-Semitic, accepted money from Libya and was forced to sell some properties to pay a debt to the Internal Revenue Service.

Billy, who cultivated his image as a sometimes profane, beerdrinking good ol' boy, was an avid reader, a fighter who refused to go down quietly under the pressures of alcoholism or EMPORIA - An Emporia man escaped from the Lyon County Jail after he and another inmate overpowered their jailer, officials said.

Ray Hinderliter, who was awaiting trial on two counts of forgery and for failure to appear in court on a misdemeanor theft charge, remained at large Sunday afternoon after fleeing the jail in Emporia about 11:35 p.m. Saturday, said a dispatcher with the sheriff's department who declined to give her name.

The other inmate was caught by the jailer before he could make good his escape, the dispatcher said.

The jailer, whom the dispatcher refused to identify, was slightly injured. He was examined at a hospital and was released.

Mountain men rendezvous

FORT SCOTT, Kan. - Mountain men from the 1820s prowled through a camp of tepees and lodges this weekend while reliving an era at the Fort Scott National Historic Site.

The trappers, traders, hunters and their families from Kansas and Missouri were part of the Old Fort's "Mountain Man Rendezvous."

"It just feels like you're getting away from everything for the weekend," said Penny Bogle of Arma as she sat cross-legged in Indian-style clothing.

In 1822, William Ashley and Andrew Henry, partners in the Missouri Fur Company, used a newspaper advertisement to recruit "enterprising young men willing to ascend the Missouri River to its source." Men like Hugh Glass and Jedediah Smith responded to the ad and started an era that lasted about 20 years.

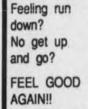

According to the National Park Service, the mountain men lived in the mountains and wilderness, trapping animals. Once a year, beginning in 1824, they would gather in a large rendezvous to sell their furs and buy supplies.

Bud Wivel, of Frontenac, Kan., spends 36 weekends a year traveling to various rendezvous campsites.

"I just got interested in the trappers and the history and started following it," he said. Wivel, who was wearing strands of turquoise beads and bear claws around his neck, said, "You make just about everything you wear and use. I enjoy the trading and the visiting. I've met a million good people."

Experiment shows alcohol acquired

By Stacy Sweazy Collegian Reporter

If drunken rats were to infest Aggieville, they might have some of the same patterns of behavior that intoxicated humans have.

"I think for rats, and probably humans, too, we habituate to the taste of alcohol," said Stephen Kiefer, associate professor of psychology.

A two-part study observing the effects of alcohol on laboratory rats is being conducted in the Department of Psychology. The goal of the research is to determine if alcohol is an acquired taste, he said.

The study is sponsored by the Public Health and National Institute of Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism. It is funded by a $120,000 federal

The research begins by inserting an intra-oral fistula into the scalps of the rats. The polyethylene tubing leads from the top of the skull through the cheek muscle to the rat's first molar.

The animals are then put in a testing chamber where one millimeter of fluid, made of 100 proof grain alcohol and water, is injected slowly into the tubing to the rat's mouth. Each rat is videotaped for 30 minutes and each frame is studied for behavioral Missy Orr and Paula Bice, graduate students in physiological psychology, spend more than 50 hours each week viewing the tapes.

"We want to characterize their responses to alcohol," Bice said.

The students look for lateral tongue protrusions, swallowing, paw licking, and lip flares, which are positive responses. Flailing, aversive head shaking, chin rubbing, paw pushing, fluid expulsion and gaping are all classic aversive responses, Orr

"We score blindly, not knowing what strength of alcohol the animal has consumed, so we are not biased,"

The experiment's second part will determine how taste affects alcohol consumption and how consumption affects response.

Related tests at the University of Indiana Medical School found that rats did prefer alcohol. Their preference was determined after they were given access to an alcohol and water solution. The rats drank at their leisure and acclimated to the taste rapidly, Kiefer said.

Offspring from rats preferring alcohol will be used in the second part of Kiefer's research. "I can give the rats my taste test and see which will be the big drinkers," he said. Kiefer began the study in 1986, three years after he applied for the national grant. Funding from the grant will be available through 1991.

Once the study is finished, Kiefer will summarize the data and give a final presentation to government

"The work is interesting. You see something, do it all and see the results," Orr said.

Alumni funds set record

By Jenny Reschke Collegian Reporter

K-State alumni and friends shattered three contribution records during the past fiscal year as gifts to the KSU Foundation surpassed the $12.5 million mark.

Foundation President Art Loub announced earlier this month that records for the number of donors, number of gifts and total contributions were set during the 1988 fiscal year, which ended June 30.

For the second consecutive year, donors eclipsed their previous totals. They achieved a 25 percent rate of financial participation among the 95,000-member alumni body.

The percentage of K-State's alumni who support their alma mater is the highest in the Big Eight Conference and one of the best in the nation. The University of Kansas is second in the Big Eight in percentage of alumni support with 18 percent, said Gordon Dowell, director of publications for the Foundation.

Oklahoma State University, the Big Eight institution most often compared to K-State in size, showed less than a 10 percent rate of alumni support, Dowell said. During the 1988 fiscal year, the Foundation recorded 33,620 gifts from 28,297 donors, totaling $12,573,481.

"These totals are phenomenal," Loub said. "They illustrate the high level of support K-State enjoys and how a well-planned fund-raising program, supported by our staff, the University administration, the students, our alumni and friends, can harness that support for the betterment of the University."

Significant gains were achieved in alumni cash support of academic departments, which rose 65 percent to $3.9 million, and gifts from estates, which jumped 285 percent to $1.6 million.

The new donations will be distributed according to the donors' requests, Dowell said.

'We have very little say about where the gifts will go, but the money will primarily be used for scholarships," Dowell said.

In addition to breaking several donation records, the Foundation's planned giving program has recently been ranked as the most successful in the Big Eight. Statistics released by the Council For the Advancement of Education for the 1986-87 reporting year show that planned gifts represented more than 26 percent of the $10.2 million raised by the Foundation.

The Foundation also recently conducted the Fall President's Club Activity Day, which included the first public viewing of Bramlage Coliseum.

Attracting more that 800 members and guests to the event, the University's premier donor organization added 102 new members in the past year. The President's Club members have committed more than $61 million to the University, said President's Club National Chairman Charles Hostetler.

The KSU Foundation, the University's official fund-raising arm, works with alumni, former students, friends, corporations and foundations to secure private support from across the nation for the University's benefit.

Bramlage celebration to kick off Homecoming, student activities

By Sarah Kobs Collegian Reporter

The official opening of Bramlage Coliseum will kickoff Homecoming '88 and a new tradition of student activities with a formal celebration Friday.

K-State students, faculty, alumni and supporters have been invited to attend the Bramlage Gala from 6 to 10 p.m. to celebrate the official opening of the coliseum.

The KSU Foundation is sponsoring the Gala and the Alumni Association is sponsoring the band, Matt Betton and the Palace Jazz Band.

John Fairman, co-chairman of the Gala planning committee, said 900 tickets have been sold. Committee members are hoping to double that "The $35 cost will include dining, dancing and drinks," Fairman said. "This may seem high to some of the students, but it is a special event and everything is included in the price. We're trying not to push anyone away."

He said $25 will be tax-deductible since that much goes toward general student scholarships.

The Union Food Service is preparing an international menu of Italian, Polynesian, Kansas City Western and Oriental food. There will also be a large selection of French desserts.

"It will be a walk-through buffet so people can try food from every area. The Union Food Service is doing a super, bang-up job," Fairman

Matt Betton and the Palace Jazz Band will perform from 7:30 to 9:30 p.m. in the concourse of Bramlage.

Bill Muir, co-chairman of the Gala planning committee, said dining and dancing will be confined to the concourse.

"People will be able to go to the seating areas to see the seating arrangements," Muir said.

There will be guides at the Gala but there won't be any escorted tours, he said. Guests may tour the coliseum, although some areas will be restricted, such as the locker rooms.

"There will be valet parking provided by Student Senate," Muir said. office in Hollis House.

The K-State marching band will play at the entrance from 5:45 to 6:45 p.m. There also will be a sign acknowledging everyone who contributed or helped with the coliseum, he "Dress for the celebration should be suits for men and nice dresses for ladies," Fairman said. "We want everyone to be comfortable for this special occasion."

Several prominent people are expected to attend the Gala, including Fred Bramlage, President Jon Wefald, and possibly Governor Mike Hayden. Most of the top K-State administrators will be there, Fairman said.

There won't be a formal dedication of the coliseum at the Gala. The official dedication will be at 11 a.m. Saturday. The Beach Boys will be in concert at 8 p.m. that evening.

Tickets can be purchased until Thursday at the KSU Foundation

Kansas State Collegian Opinions ■ Monday, September 26, 1988

Architecture needs space, not restricted admissions

K-State is having to face the fact that with success comes problems. As the number of students attending the University has increased, available space in residence halls, classrooms and classes has decreased.

Nowhere is the problem having a greater and faster impact than in the College of Architecture. Not only are classrooms cramped, but the studios where students complete their assignments are full. If any more students are admitted, they will have nowhere to work.

Thus, the suggestion has been made that a cap be placed on the number of students who are admitted to the college as freshmen. Already the admission to the design program, which begins with an architecture major's junior year, is limited and on a competitive basis.

If the suggestion is accepted, students would know immediately whether they have what it takes to make it in the program, thus allowing them extra time to plan what academic program to go into if they couldn't make it in architecture.

Sounds fair, but it isn't. Like the selective admissions proposal made by the Kansas Board of Regents last year, it ignores the ability of human beings to perform beyond the level that their high school grades might indicate.

It also assumes that each student has had equal preparation and so may be judged by the same standards. It is obvious that not all schools in Kansas can provide the same level of preparation for students. Rural school districts are limited by a small tax base and cannot provide the same programs urban schools districts can.

Of course, maybe K-State wishes to serve only students from urban areas, such as Chicago, where the University is making a push for better prepared, more affluent students.

What better way to promote economic development in Kansas than to bring affluent, out-of-state students to Kansas to spend their money here for four or more years?

Another way might be to provide an education for all Kansas students who desire it and to make sure space is available to accommodate them.

After all, that would be in the land-grant tradition.

Elections mock democracy

n the 1984 presidential election, Walter Mondale, the Democratic candidate for president, appeared on national television and told the American people he intended to raise taxes. He went on to lose in one of the worst landslides in U.S. history.

In this election, the Democratic platform doesn't acknowledge that the word "taxes" exists. Delegates to the Atlanta convention spoke the word only in whispers. The platform itself has been accused of being overly vague. It is much like the Republican platform was in 1980, when Ronald Reagan became president. Now, the Republican platform is very precise and takes strong stands in favor of the death penalty and against abortion and the Equal Rights Amendment.

If history holds true, the Democrats will win the presidency. In the United States, if you take a strong, uncompromising stand on an issue in an election, odds are you will lose. The election system does not allow anyone to be elected who does not claim to be "middle of the road."

To find evidence of this claim, look no farther than the television in the living room. It is difficult these days to turn on a television and not see a political ad, whether it be a commercial sponsored by the Democrats promoting Michael Dukakis or one sponsored by the Republicans attacking him. These commercials, after weeding through all the flowery rhetoric and pictures of candidates holding babies, have the same general features in common: Dukakis and George Bush say they are for stronger families, strong defense, stronger moral values and patriotism. Both parties are against drugs, crime and taxes. What they do not say is how they intend to achieve their agendas.

The reason neither candidate will get overly specific about their stands on specific issues is that they do not want to suffer the same fate the so-called "third parties" have traditionally suffered.

What's this? Third parties, you say? You mean someone is running for president besides the Republicans and Democrats? Can they do that? Yes, they can; yes, they have; and yes, they are. In the 1984 election, 15 parties, not including the two major ones, fielded candidates. The list of candidates and their parties included David Bergland, Libertarian; Sonia Johnson, Citizens; Bob Richards, Populist; Gus Hall, Communist; Larry Holmes (not the boxer), Workers' League; Mel Mason, Socialist Worker; Earl F. Dodge, Prohibition; and Delmar Davis, American.

These candidates represented viewpoints

Commentary

DWAYNE LIVELY Collegian Columnist that were considered "out of the mainstream," and they lost.

The Libertarians, for example, supported, and still do support, the abolition of an income tax. They believe the only way to limit government is to cut off its money supply. The Libertarians, needless to say, did not win in 1984 and they will not win this year. Political Action Committees do not donate heavily to the Libertarians because they are seen as losers, and thus they cannot buy lots of TV time like the Republicans and Democrats can. Their ability to get their message to the public is severely hindered, and if a political party is unable to get its message out, it cannot persuade anyone to believe in it. In fact, most voters will probably never realize the party exists. Ever hear of the Big Deal Party? They ran in 1984.

he problem with the election process starts with the Electoral College. Since it is winner-take-all in most states, a candidate who gets 49 percent of the popular vote in a state gets zero percent of the electoral votes. Even worse, the system doesn't require a candidate to have a majority of the popular vote to win, just more votes than the other candidates. A person in a threecandidate race could win a state race with only 34 percent of the popular vote, if his or her opponents received 33 percent each. The leading vote-getter would get all the state's electoral votes even though 66 percent of the voters didn't like the candidate.

Since the system will not compromise, the candidates must. Candidates who hold strong positions on issues risk alienating large groups of voters. For example, if candidates come out in favor of abortion, they alienate one group of people; and if they oppose it, they alienate another. What they typically do is take the middle road. The candidates say: "I am opposed to abortion, except in instances of rape or incest or when carrying the pregnancy to term might endanger the life of the mother." Are candidates who say this for or against abortion? It is hard to tell, but, more than likely, they would prefer to ban voters. That's real democracy in action.

abortions. That attitude, though, will not get them elected, so they compromise their beliefs.

Nole wi

Thus, the goal of running for office becomes not a way to make a political statement and make a public stand for a cause, but a way to get power. Once in office, a person might take a stand on a controversial issue, unless, of course, he or she wants to be reelected. Unfortunately, the voters simply don't know what they're getting when they cast their votes.

Ironically, a candidate who has a reputation as a compromiser won't get elected. Presidential candidates, therefore, have at their disposal a grab bag of "safe" issues they can take illusory strong stands on. They typically are for values, patriotism, keeping the country safe, and keeping families together. A person who claimed to be against these things, even in a bar on a Saturday night, would be perceived as a bit off-center and would face a huge backlash. Bush is using the pledge of allegiance pseudo-issue to make Dukakis look anti-patriotic. The more pressure Bush keeps on Dukakis, the fewer questions Bush has to answer himself.

residential candidates are typically against drugs, crime and high taxes. Again, these are safe issues if one fights against them and political suicide if one favors them. Who wants a president who is for an increase in crime? Bush and Dukakis are slinging a lot of mud over this issue, each claiming the other is soft on crime. Yet neither is saying what he intends to do about crime, especially drug-related crime. Granted, Bush does support the death penalty, but that issue is so controversial it will probably kill his chances to become president.

Is there a solution to this mess? Or will voters be forced to sit through years and years of elections based on pseudo-issues? The Electoral College could be dissolved and replaced with a direct election, or the method of distributing electoral votes could be changed from a winner-take-all basis to a percentage basis. This would give parties who came in second and third at the state level a chance at the national level.

After all, if a party finishes a close second in each of the 50 states and the District of Columbia, and two other parties split for first in all the states, the party which came in second will have more popular votes. With the present system, that party would get no electoral votes and would lose the election. The voting process itself would drown the voice of the

My letter concerns the use and misuse of the bike paths that go by Durland Hall. I am a bicycle rider, and get very frustrated with the Is efficiency better? people who walk on the bike path. First of all, it is clearly marked BIKE LANE. Second, someone on foot does not save any time by walking on the bike path. Third, pedestrians on the bike path can cause accidents, either by being in the way of the biker or filling up the path for the use of bikes going the opposite direction.

I have seen this happen, and have narrowly avoided a collision with a bike going the opposite direction on the same path. So think about where you are walking!

The other side of the issue, of course, is bikers on the sidewalk. I do not support bikers riding on the sidewalks, which causes problems also. Unfortunately, some of the bike racks are located by buildings, making it difficult to get to them without riding on the sidewalk. The bikers who ride on the sidewalk as a "shortcut" are in the wrong as much as the pedestrians who walk on the bike paths for a "shortcut." With the cooperation of both pedestrians and bikers, we would all be less frustrated trying to get to our classes on time. Liz Schmalzried senior in chemistry

On Tuesday, you ran a front page article titled "Students misuse parking permits." In that article, K-State Police Chief Charles Beckom said that his department is planning to buy an $80,000 computer system to make the ticketing process "cheaper and faster." Boy, that's really good news! Now the campus police will probably be able to issue twice or even three times the number of tickets as before. We at K-State should consider ourselves lucky to have such an efficient system that can really nail us to the wall when it comes to parking on campus. With increased enrollment, we'll have an even slimmer chance of finding a place to park, and with the new computerized ticketing process, we'll have great odds on receiving a ticket. Isn't technology just great?!

Beckom stated the new computer will free "personnel from routine tasks within the ticketing process." Sounds like some of those personnel may lose their jobs. Or maybe Beckom could send them all out with handheld computers and issue even more tickets! They could join the force of campus police who hang out behind Seaton Hall at night, cruising the lots for parking offenders (not unlike buzzards circling above their dying

These officers know that this is a prime location to issue tickets because architecture students who spend many late hours in studios would rather park illegally than walk across an inadequately lit campus to their cars. Why is this? Probably because they don't feel safe on campus at night. Why should they when the police are diligently issuing tickets while across campus someone is having his or her car stolen, tires slashed, or being mugged or raped? It seems that parking tickets are the price some students are willing to pay in exchange for security - a security not provided by campus police.

I am included in that group of students and have probably paid enough in parking tickets to cover a down payment on Beckom's computer.

More than 1,600 people took advantage of the opportunity Saturday to venture through the Konza Prairie Research Natural

The restricted access ban for the 8,616-acre native landscape was lifted for the Konza Prairie Visitors' Day, said J.L. Zimmerman, professor of biology and coordinator of the event.

"The Conservancy is interested in preservation, and we conduct research on these areas as well,"

Konza Prairie researchers are studying ecological activities such as the effects of fire, differences between mowed and burned areas, wildlife populations and composition of prairie streams.

Self-guided nature trails, guided hikes and a haywagon ride organized for visitors to see wild bison - were among the day's attractions. Zimmerman said the buffalo didn't cooperate as planned.

'(The bison) found out it was Visitors' Day and took off to the other end of the pasture," Zimmerman said. "Actually, though, the hayride was still probably one of the more popular attractions, because people can get out in the prairie and not have to walk."

Hurricane Gilbert proves expensive

By The Associated Press

MEXICO CITY - Rising out of the azure waters like the Caribbean god of wind, Hurricane Gilbert smashed idyllic resorts and industrial cities during an eight-day rampage across the Caribbean and Mexico.

Gilbert grew into a hurricane with winds of 74 mph on Sept. 10, 100 miles southwest of Puerto Rico, sending the first waves of torrential rain and panic to impoverished towns in Haiti and the Dominican Republic.

By the time Gilbert lost its hurricane status over northeastern Mexico, it had killed more than 300 people, left hundreds of thousands homeless and caused billions of dollars damage to the Caribbean, Central America, Mexico and the United Gilbert's trail of destruction across nine nations occurred despite the technological advances of modernday weather forecasting. Airplanes flew into the eye of the hurricane several times daily and meteorologists with computers predicted the storm's next target. "It was one of the top 10 as far as intensity, size and destructive potential," said Bob Sheets, director of the National Hurricane Center in Coral Gables, Fla.

After leaving at least eight dead in the Dominican Republic, Gilbert punished Jamaica's capital Kingston and the resort of Montego Bay, then pushed northwestward past the Cayman Islands and Cuba.

Jamaica, which depends on tourism for much of its hard currency, sustained $8 billion in damage and at least 30 people died. Kingston lost much of its drinking water, electricity and many services. A half-million people, nearly one-fourth the island population, were left homeless.

Gilbert moved into the Yucatan Channel between Cuba and Mexico, gathering strength over warm waters to become a Category 5 storm or "great hurricane" with winds of up to Next struck was Cancun, a Mexican island resort off the Yucatan that was built in the 1970s after computer studies showed it would be rarely hit by hurricanes.

In one Cancun hotel, where 450 were packed into a banquet room. refugees had to hold up a wall against the strong winds.

After the storm, a 118-foot Cuban fishing boat was found tossed up beside a beach hotel, dramatic proof of Gilbert's strength.

Gilbert caused more than $300 million in damage to the tourist industry of Cancun and Cozumel. In nearby Merida, it destroyed nearly all the corn and fruit crops. At least 24 died in the area.

Gilbert next moved into the Gulf of Mexico, threatening oil drilling installations and populated areas from Veracruz to Florida, before moving over land in the state of Tamaulipas, 100 miles south of Brownsville, Texas.

cards Greeting

By The Associated Press

KALAMAZOO, Mich. - With something as simple as a greeting card, Truesillia Ruth Shank hopes to help bridge the gap between the worlds of the sighted and the blind.

"It seems so unfair that a blind person should miss out on the simple, little pleasures of life," said Shank, sitting in the living room of her modest home that doubles as the office for her 7-month-old card company, Sucurre Greetings. Sucurre is an Old French word meaning "to assist."

"Can you imagine being 30, 40 or 50 years old and having to wait for someone to read a stack of Christmas cards to you? Or not being able to go into a store and pick out an anniversary card for your wife or a birthday card for your child?" she asked.

The inspiration for Sucurre Greetings, which Shank owns with her husband, came while she was working on an advertising project with a blind businessman.

"He was doing things I couldn't do didn't seem right that he needed someone to go to a store with him just to pick out a card."

Because of the limited market, Braille greeting cards have not been manufactured by established card companies, said Adam Ash, publisher of the Gift Reporter, a trade publication for the gift industry. Some rehabilitation agencies have been known to sell some Braille cards at Christmas, and others translate greeting cards to Braille when requested.

"At best, what you've been able to get up until now is a card for a sighted person that's been Brailled. These cards are designed specifically for a visually impaired person, but are still appealing to a sighted person as well," said Paul Ponchillia, a professor in the Department of Blind Rehabilitation at Western Michigan University.

Ponchillia, who is blind, helped the Shanks design the cards.

The Shanks, also co-owners of a sell for $2 and $2.50 locally.

even with my sight," she said. "It just year-old advertising and printing company, hope the pastel colors and simple but elegant designs embossed on the front of the cards will appeal to a wide audience. Underneath the design is a description of the object in Braille. Inside, Braille appears under the message.

One lavender card has an embossed bird in flight on the cover. Inside, the message is "My heart's all a-flutter."

In addition to her basic line of 25 cards, Shank said she also has a line of Christmas cards.

Shank, a bubbly, 32-year-old mother of three, embosses the cards by hand. Her husband, Michael, art director at a television station, does much of the designing and printing. Most of the Brailling is done by blind volunteers.

Distribution of the cards is mostly limited to local card shops, but Shank says she fills mail orders and is trying to line up distributors for the cards in other parts of the country. The cards

International course teaches grain management techniques

By Jodi Hundley Collegian Reporter

This morning, a two-week short course for 22 feed manufacturers from Turkey begins through the International Grains Program. IGP was established within the Department of Grain Science and Industry.

Charles Deyoe, professor of grain science and industry and the director of IGP, said this short course is different from others this

"When the company in Turkey contacted us about the program, they said they could fill the entire course," Deyoe said. "Usually, the participants are from two or more countries. But they wanted the short course entirely for the Turkish feed manufacturers."

with funds provided by the Kansas Legislature to promote the marketing of wheat, corn, soybeans and sorghum, according to IGP's annual report. Courses, seminars and workshops are available on request as time and facilities permit.

In 1985, a similar short course same topics and faculty members. It was such a success that the company asked for another course, Deyoe said.

They came back this year. The participants are different, but from the same company as before," he

The program has two parts. The first week has lectures about such topics as feed manufacturing plant design, maintenance and management, sanitation, and safety and

The IGP was established in 1978 quality control. The second week is devoted to visiting commercial feed operations. "We'll (also) be discussing computerization of the plants. The use of microcomputers for inventory situation in Turkey," he said. Although Deyoe no longer lecwas conducted with some of the tures at these short courses, he handles the overall responsibilities.

> "The details are worked out by the faculty because they have the capabilities to pull the program together," Deyoe said. "They have 'front-line' information in these areas."

The American Soybean Association is sponsoring the event along with IGP, but is not directly involved in this particular course, Deyoe said.

Conflict delays December graduation

By The Collegian Staff

Due to a scheduling conflict with a sporting event, K-State commencement committee officials announced a change in the date of the commencement ceremonies for summer and fall graduates.

The original date was Saturday, Dec. 10, but was changed to Sunday, Dec. 11 at 2 p.m.

The change was proposed because commencement ceremonies in Bramlage Coliseum conflicted with a K-State home basketball game. Even though the game is at night, there would not have been enough time to change the floor and get things ready for the commencement ceremonies, said Hakim Salahu-Din, chairman of the commencement committee.

"The subcommittee came up with several recommendations and this was the best," Salahu-Din said.

The change was imposed because members of the commencement committee said Bramlage Coliseum should be used for activities other than sporting events, he said.

The commencement ceremony will go on as originally planned. It will include all the colleges and both undergraduate and graduate students.

"(We will) make it interesting without short-changing anyone. The ceremony will be done with dignity.

The faculty expects dignity, Salahu-Din said.

The change in the schedule will have its pros and cons among the students involved, Salahu-Din said.

With the ceremony being on Sunday, some students will not have completed their final exams.

"These students are the first class to graduate in Bramlage. I hope it's a good reaction without inconveniencing (the students) too much," Salahu-Din said.

Congress holding on social issues

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - Social initiatives from welfare to child care are hanging in the balance as Congress draws toward adjournment, increasingly impatient and preoccupied with presidential politics.

TOKYO - Emperor Hirohito lay in serious condition Sunday but was alert enough to watch the finals of the autumn sumo tournament on television, and a daughter who paid a bedside visit expressed optimism about

Thousands of well-wishers braved thunderstorms and cold rain to throng the gates of the moated Imperial Palace in central Tokyo under a sea of bright umbrellas. Palace officials say 300,000 have signed their names in a dozen registries set up nationwide to pray for Hirohito's recovery.

The 87-year-old monarch remained under intensive, round-theclock care by a team of court doctors after vomiting blood from an intestinal hemorrhage on Monday. The emperor has sat on Japan's Chrysanthemum Throne for nearly 62 years. His condition was serious but appeared stable. Palace officials acknowledged Hirohito discharged a small amount of blood Sunday morning.

The officials would not confirm published reports the emperor has cancer of the upper intestine. Cancer is rarely acknowledged publicly in

The Imperial Household Agency said Hirohito viewed the final matches of the Autumn Grand Sumo Tournament on television. A noted fan of the ancient wrestling sport, the emperor watched grand champion Chiyonofuji claim his 25th tournament title with a 15-0 record.

First woman bishop elected in Boston

By The Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA — The Rev. Barbara C. Harris, elected the first woman bishop in the Anglican Communion's 450-year history, said Sunday her elevation is the latest step in a movement to bring the church into the mainstream.

Harris, 58, a former public relations executive, was elected Saturday to the position of suffragan, or assistant, bishop for the eastern Massachusetts diocese of the Episcopal Church. The diothe nation's largest in both geography and population.

"A fresh wind is blowing across this church of ours," she said in her first sermon at Philadelphia's Church of the Advocate since her election.

Gong Yu Xi, exchange student in biochemistry, and Mike Williams, junior in electrical engineering, cheer for their horses as they watch them come across the finish line in the third race.

ematic or not — it's all horseplay is red, the only thing a group from K-State was interested in Saturday was how Spacey Kasey would do in the eighth. Whether it was to win, place or show, making the day's bets took serious, strategic planning. Some members of the group studiously pored over track literature, trying to pick a winner, while others quickly scanned the program and based their bets on the horses' names or the town from which the animals came.

But with any method, the outcome was often the same.

"God, I picked dog meat in that race," said Craig Schmidt, Overland Park.

John Kane, senior in physical education, said he participated in the trip last year with much different results.

"We did a lot better last year," he said. "If it was a horse I bet on (this year), then it was dead."

The trip, sponsored by the Union Program Council Travel Committee, didn't have any hig winners, except, perhaps, those who didn't bet at all.

"I didn't come to bet. I was just interested to see the people and how the people would react. I've never seen anything like this before," said Maria Held, junior in journalism and mass communications and a

Christof Ebert, senior in computer science and a German exchange student, also went along for the entertainment rather than the wagering.

"I just came here for the fun, I'm not going to bet," he said.

In addition to the thoroughbreds, clips from the University of Nebraska at Lincoln's football games were shown in the track's clubhouse seating area, drinks were served and nachos were tasted. All in all, the group declared the trip "lovely."

The travel committee offers "mini-trips" to provide students a chance to leave the Manhattan area and see something new, said Mike Penner, UPC program adviser.

"Many of the students who take these trips are foreign students. It gives them a chance to see different things and provides for a well-rounded education," he said. Gong Yu Xi, an exchange scholar from mainland China studying biochemistry, only made one bet -Pannie Oirl in the third to win. Pannie Girl's selection was scientifically based on one fact — she was from the hometown of another student on the trip.

Pannie Girl placed second in the race, and Gong lost her $2 bet, but that was all.

Craig Schmidt, Overland Park, and Pam Kaus, senior in elementary education, discuss wagering before the first race.

"America means much more freedom. This is exciting. (It) doesn't matter, win or lose, I enjoy it. (I enjoy) watching others and relaxing," she said.

Pam Kaus, senior in elementary education, said she placed her bets based on the horses' names.

relaxing," she said.

Gambling, Gong said, is not allowed by the government in her homeland.

"I like this. We can't (gamble) at home. This is fun," she said.

Gong spent the rest of the day watching the others, win and leave.

The owners, however, make it tough for bettors like Kaus. After all, it's difficult to choose between horses with names like Tiny's Last Chance, Draging Aheavyload, No Lovin, Risky Knight, Goofy Bugger, Spacey Kasey, Sheez R. Choice and Successful Imp. The owners, however, make it Mike Hensley, senior in education, teamed up with Penner to split their profits — and losses.

"It doesn't seem like you're losing that much this way," Hensley

Even though neither Hensley nor Penner had been to the horse races before, their system was methodical. How far the horse had travelled to race at the track, the jockey's record, the Blue Sheet's choice and how much - or little - they wanted to spend dictated their Schmidt's system was based on the horses' earnings and latest race performance. After winning his bet in the first race and the first half of his daily double, he skipped placing a bet in the second race.

"It's a bad omen to bet in the second when you have the daily dou-ble," he said.

After losing the daily double, the point seemed moot.

When one exacta paid off more than $21,000 on a $2 bet, the group let out a collective groan and talk

But that didn't seem a problem for most members of the group.

"There should be more room in here now that all of the money is gone," said Penner, as the group loaded the van for the three-hour return trip.

The van ride was one reason Schmidt said he went on the trip.

"What else can you do for $15 on a Saturday night? It's fun and you get stuck in a van with 14 other people you've never met before," he said. "This is cheap entertainment."

This is the first season for nighttime racing at the Nebraska State Fair Park. Post times at the track are 7 p.m. Wednesday through Friday, 5 p.m. Saturday and 2 p.m. Sunday.

State Fair officials say that adding the lights has increased attendance, but not the amount wagered.

Attendance at the track's opening day, Sept 16, was 40 percent higher than last season's opener. However, the mutual handle figures decreased 2 percent. Officials were encouraged by the drop though, because Ak-Sar-Ben suffered about a 15 percent drop in wagering its first day.

Racing season at the Nebraska State Fair Park ends Nov. 13.

K-State's Joe Bonneau collapses in Steve Palmer's arms after crossing the finish line at the Emporia State University Invitational cross crountry meet Saturday.

'Cat cross country teams dominate Emporia meet

By Mark Schmeller Collegian Reporter

EMPORIA - The K-State men's and women's cross country teams easily won their respective divisions at the Emporia State University Invitational, but that wasn't what coach John Capriotti was looking

"I wanted a low-key meet to see how we stacked up against each other," Capriotti said.

He got that and was happy with what he saw.

Against a field of small colleges and junior colleges, K-State's women racked up a perfect score of 15, with the Wildcats capturing the top eight places. Freshman Janet Haskin, running in her first collegiate race, led the charge with a firstplace time of 18:11. Junior Angie Barry was next in 18:24, followed by freshman Janet Treiber, redshirt freshman Jennifer Hillier, juniors Becky Ives, Marge Eddy, Jenny Faunce and Tammy Van Laeys. Leslie Meidiger closed out the sweep in eighth.

An excessive number of turns and poor footing slowed the times, not to mention course officals, who allowed Haskin to take a wrong turn near the first mile of the 3.1-mile course.

"That messed up my rhythm," Haskin said. "I tired myself out by trying to get back."

In spite of the panic, Haskin managed gradually to work her way back up to teammate Barry and to pull away over the last mile. Barry, on her way back from a prolonged bout of injuries last year, was happy with her race.

"I didn't feel really quick, but I felt strong," she said.

Capriotti was equally pleased with the men's squad, which scored 18 points to runner-up Hutchinson Community College's 68. He was even more optimistic about the coming season, as four of his top runners - sophomore Jan Jonnson, junior Dave Warders, and seniors Brian Zwahlen and Daryl Reichard - did not race Saturday.

Junior Pat Hessini, winner of the five-mile race in 25:33, echoed Capriotti's optimism.

"I'm glad we started out here. I'd rather win here than start out against tough competition," said Hessini, who was bothered by muscle cramps during the race.

Freshman Ron Smith surprised Capriotti with a second-place finish, coming in right behind Hessini in 25:36 and ahead of junior David Keller (25:38). Smith was also surprised.

"I thought Pat would take it out faster after two miles," he said.

Senior Rob Hayes took fifth in 25:59, followed by freshman Todd Eggers (seventh, 26:19), redshirt sophomore Steve Christenson (eighth, 26:19), and sophomore Matt Vavala (ninth, 26:23).

Todd Eggers and Matt Vavala are exhausted as they near the finish line. K-State's Pat Hessini won the five-mile race in a time of 25:33.

Ojeda's mishap brings back not-so-fond memory

baseball's National League Eastern Division title late last week, but Mets' pitcher Bob Ojeda saw his season come to an end last Wednesday - at the hands of an electric hedge trimmer.

I feel for Bob Ojeda, because I've been where he's at right now.

As he was working in his yard last week in New York, Ojeda caught the top third of the middle finger of his pitching hand in the hedge trimmer, nearly severing the finger.

As I was trimming hedges for the city of Salina during the summer of 1982, I caught the top half of the ring finger of my right — or throwing hand — in the blades of an electric

The New York Mets clinched trimmer, just like Ojeda did last week.

> Simply put, it was as scary as hell. Ojeda, just as I did, underwent microsurgery for nearly three hours in an attempt to repair the damage to the finger.

> Although Ojeda no doubt had the best doctors in the business and will undoubtedly have the finest physical therapists in the land coaching his recovery, he's got a long row to hoe.

Though I don't know the specifics of how Ojeda's finger was repaired, I do know that in my case wires were inserted into the finger to stabilize it against further damage and to hopefully hold the severed tendons in place long enough to help them heal.

Svoboda on Sports

DAVID SVOBODA Sports Columnist

Today, because of the nerve damage, I barely have any feeling in the finger. Because of the tendon damage, the top third of the finger sits at a permanent 45 degree angle.

That's the kind of thing Ojeda likely faces right now, and in the case of a man who makes his livelihood throwing a baseball with the hand containing the injured finger, it's got to be even tougher, both physically and mentally.

Ojeda faces a myriad of physical therapy exercises. His finger will be put into a whirlpool and worked by his therapist. Back and forth it will be bent in an attempt to restore it to full mobility.

He'll play with putty, squeezing it just as would a child, with the joint being stretched to the limit, no doubt causing a great deal of pain.

It's how Ojeda responds to the therapy mentally that's going to make the difference.

Ojeda has faced many challenges in his career in the majors. He started his big league career with the Boston Red Sox, and a left-handed pitcher in Fenway Park plays more mind games with himself than almost anyone else

With the Green Monster looming behind the pitcher in left field, Fenway Park can be a lefty's nightmare. Ojeda battled it well during his days in Boston, however, and he'll be forced to battle again to overcome this injury. He was battling this season in New York, as well. Once one of the NL's most consistent left-handers, Ojeda struggled for most of 1988 with a sub-.500 record. He was the victim of a lack of offensive support, much like Danny Jackson was during his last several seasons with the Kansas City Royals. That, no doubt, had to be playing head games with Ojeda.

"Why me?" Ojeda no doubt had to be saying. After last Wednesday, he has to be saying it louder and more

Now he's got to stop saying "Why me?" and he's got to start saying, "Yes, I can."

Through all of the pain he's likely to face both physically and mentally in the coming weeks and months, Ojeda's mental attitude is of the utmost importance.

If Ojeda folds up like an accord-■ See COLUMN, Page 14

K-State volleyball team swept at Nebraska

By Mike May Sports Writer

LINCOLN, Neb. - Facing its toughest competition of the season, K-State's volleyball team lost three straight matches in the University of Nebraska Invitational Friday and

The field included No. 6 Nebraska and a University of Wyoming team which has been ranked as high as No. 19 this year. The collective record of the teams entering the tournament was 28-9.

The round-robin tournament began Friday as the University of Indiana battled K-State. The Wildcats' inconsistency proved fatal as the Hoosiers emerged victorious, 15-11, 15-9, 15-13. It was the Wildcats' first loss of the season.

In what was a sign of things to come, the Hoosiers scored seven consecutive points to take a 7-1 lead in the first game. The Wildcats battled back to a 7-7 tie behind the strong play of outside hitter Shawnee Call. Indiana then went on a 5-1 run and held on to win.

K-State played evenly through the first part of the second game. However, a Hoosier run of six points with the score tied at seven dealt the 'Cats the loss.

The Wildcats led throughout most of game three and at one point held a 7-2 lead. Indiana came back to tie the game at 12 before eventually winning.

After the match, K-State coach Scott Nelson wasn't satisfied with his team's effort.

"We didn't play hard tonight," Nelson said.

On Saturday, the 'Cats faced Nebraska in the morning session. K-State, which has never won a game in Lincoln, fell to the host 'Huskers in three games, 15-10, 15-10, 15-6.

Although the Wildcats fell to Nebraska, who lead the series against K-State 34-0, Nelson looked positively at his team's performance.

'We played with a lot of intensity today. (We had) the type of effort that was lacking in our first match," Nelson said.

The Wildcats' efforts appeared to be paying off as K-State tied Nebraska at seven in the first game. Outside hitter Mary Kinsey led the way with

But All-American Lori Endicott and Val Novak of Nebraska combined to doom the Wildcats. Together they scored seven points, breaking the game open and propelling the Cornhuskers to a 15-10 victory in the first game.

The last match of the tournament was between Wyoming and Kansas State. The Cowgirls went into the match looking for their first tournament win. In one of the best matches of the tournament, Wyoming defeated K-State in four games, 15-9, 13-15, 15-6, 15-9.

Call was the lone Wildcat selected to the six-member all-tournament

K-State's record now stands at 8-3. The Wildcats' next match is at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday at Wichita State University.

Chargers slip by Chiefs

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. -Babe Laufenberg threw a nineyard touchdown pass to Lionel James with 52 seconds left Sunday, boosting the San Diego Chargers to a 24-23 victory over Kansas City.

Gary Anderson, who had 155 yards in total offense, combined with Laufenberg to key a 61-yard, 13-play drive in the final minutes as the Chargers squared their record at 2-2 and dropped the Chiefs to 1-3.

The Chiefs appeared to have the Chargers stopped when Dino Hackett intercepted Laufenberg's pass on fourth down. But Tim Cofield was called for roughing the passer, giving San Diego a first-andgoal on the 4.

Steve DeBerg threw three touchdown passes and Paul Palmer scored twice while piling up 198 yards in total offense for the Chiefs.

Anderson, who also had a 30-yard touchdown run, had 131 yards to become the first Charger since 1982 with successive 100-yard rushing days.

On the first play of the second quarter, DeBerg floated a pass to Palmer that he took on the 45. The 1986 NCAA rushing champion then darted between two defenders and fled 71 yards to the end zone, outrunning Martin Bayless on the final 20 yards to complete the Chiefs' longest pass play to a running back in 25 years.

Space program continues despite problems

Discovery launch delayed

By The Associated Press

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. -NASA postponed the start of the countdown for space shuttle Discovery by eight hours Sunday because of lagging preparations, but still aimed for a Thursday morning liftoff.

"We're still on the timeline for launch on the 29th and that's the plan," said launch director Bob Sieck.

The countdown was rescheduled to begin at 8 a.m. EDT Monday for the first manned American space flight since the Challenger blew up over the Atlantic 32 months ago.

The space agency had added 27 unprogrammed hours to the countdown as insurance for last-minute problems, and Sieck said eight hours of that time would be used in advance to complete the work of replacing panels and work platforms.

"We don't want those people to have to do that under the gun with the clock counting," he said. "So we said, 'take all the time it takes and we'll delay the call to stations to accommodate that."

NASA had planned to start the countdown at midnight, but "buttoning up" the aft end of the spaceplane akin to closing the hood on a car - was delayed by a problem that had the potential of postponing the launch for two days.

Low voltage readings were found in an electrical circuit that triggers the explosive charges used to separate the shuttle from its fuel tank when the tank is empty. Eventually engineers determined that the fault was in a ground circuit, which does not affect the flight.

The winged spaceplane rides aloft attached at three points to the 154-foot-long external tank. At 81/2 minutes into flight, just before the shuttle reaches orbit, the explosive devices release the tank and it breaks up in the atmosphere as it falls toward the Indian Ocean.

Discovery's launch date has been changed five times in the past as new problems cropped up in getting ready for STS-26, the 26th mission of the Space Transportation System.

The Cape Canaveral area was bracing for an influx of visitors comparable to the first flight of the space shuttle in 1981 when more than 1 million crowded the roads outside the launch center.

When Discovery lifts off, with five veteran astronauts aboard, it will be a far different vehicle than on its six previous flights.

Families of Challenger crew remember catastrophic flight

By The Associated Press

HOUSTON - June Scobee says she will watch the liftoff of Discovery on television because her presence at the launch site "would just remind everyone" of the shuttle disaster that killed her husband and six other crew members.

Mrs. Scobee has not been back to Cape Canaveral, Fla., since that chilly morning of Jan. 28, 1986, when the Challenger exploded 73 seconds after launch.

Now Mrs. Scobee, whose husband, Dick, commanded the ill-fated ship, said that "like any other American citizen" she is eager for a successful Discovery mission to get NASA's manned spaceflight program back on track.

"NASA needs to focus on the launch facility, on the crew and their families," she said in a recent telephone interview. "For me to be there would just remind everyone of that tragedy. And it would be difficult for me too.'

None of the other Challenger families will attend Thursday's launch from the Kennedy Space Center. "I would hate to see anything happen to it (Discovery)," said Bruce Jarvis, father of Challenger astronaut Gre-

Some of the families have not even decided whether they will watch on TV, according to Lisa Turner, a spokeswoman for the Challenger Center, which was set up in memory

Mrs. Scobee said the Challenger tragedy changed forever the way NASA goes about its business.

"I really think they're launching a new era. There's a new awareness of how vulnerable we are," Mrs. Scobee said. "There certainly is an awareness of the risks of space flight."

Since the accident, the Challenger families have avoided discussions about their personal grief, she said. Instead, they have focused their efforts on establishing a memorial to their lost loved ones.

Those efforts were rewarded this August with the opening of the first Challenger Center for Space Science Education in Houston — a place where children can learn about space.

Students advise on radon By Amy Bullock

Information on radon gas was given at a booth manned by a student branch of the American Nuclear Society Saturday at Manhattan Town Center.

"We answered a lot of questions and gave information on whom to contact (for more information). We also gave information on how homes are tested for radon and what kind of equipment is used," said John Bayouth, graduate in nuclear engineering and president of the student branch of the American Nuclear Society.

"Radon is a radioactive gas which occurs in nature. It is not a poisonous gas, but the radioactive elements that can get into your lungs is what is dangerous," Bayouth said.

"The EPA (Environmental Protection Agency) has reported that 5 to 25 percent of all lung cancer cases have been influenced by the presence of radon gas. This is one of the reasons it is important to get your home tested," Bayouth said.

Concern about high indoor concentration of radon first arose in the late 1960's, when houses in the western United States built with contaminated material from uranium mines were found to have high levels of radon.

However, recent findings show that homes in various parts of the U.S. may have high indoor radon levels caused by natural deposits of uranium in the soil.

"If you keep your windows open in fall and spring or have a fairly good circulation of air going through your home, then that can help reduce your risk from radon," Pohl said.

"We showed the charcoal canister at our booth, but informed the public of the alpha track and other detectors available," said Bayouth.

"If people are concerned about radon, they should contact the Kansas Department of Health and Environment. And the EPA does suggest that everyone get their house tested for radon," Pohl said.

By Theresa Luling Collegian Reporter

The beginning of fall coincided with the first Flinthills Festival.

An array of bright, colorful balloons, flags and tents invaded the grounds of City Park this weekend, drawing a crowd of more than 1,000.

Kent Glasscock, festival chairman, said, "It was a combination of the Folk Life Festival and the Manhattan Arts and Crafts Show."

With no prior festival plans to work from, the board had no shared sense of vision of what the festival ought to be, he said.

"But we attracted a large number of people, and I think everyone had a good time," Glasscock said.

Loan helps small town open cafe

By The Associated Press

AMERICUS, Kan. - When the only restaurant in this town of 1,200 people closed, residents weren't content to drive seven miles to Emporia for coffee, burgers and a little gossip.

About 60 people, armed with a Small Business Administration loan, formed a public corporation and sold stock at $50 a share to raise the approximately $75,000 needed to open the Breckenridge County Cafe.

The City Cafe left a void in the community when it closed in April, a casualty of the rural economy.

'A cafe is the hub of a small town. and we needed one badly," said Betsy Landwehr, president of Americus Enterprises Inc., the corporation that owns the new 80-seat cafe.

Americus Enterprises bought a vacant building a short distance from the old cafe and held a contest to name the new one. Breckenridge County Cafe, drawing on Lyon County's pre-Civil War name, won over 40 other entries.

Wendell Tietz, a 74-year-old farmer and bachelor, said he became a stockholder because "I pretty much needed a place to eat.'

Landwehr hopes the business does well enough to pay stockholder dividends. But if it doesn't, the cafe still has done its job.

"It's a good place to catch up on gossip, a good loafing place," Tietz

A visitor walks through the newly finished Bramlage Coliseum Monday the public for the first time. The new coliseum will seat 13,500 people for basketball games and is equipped as a multi-purpose coliseum.

Coliseum draws 200 spectators

By Brian Hummell Staff Writer

Combine a $47,000 floor, a $250,000 scoreboard and a lot of purple and the result is the Fred Bramlage Coliseum.

About 200 people attended an open house at the coliseum Monday

"Tonight was to allow students to see Bramlage in all of its purple splendor," said Troy Lubbers, student body president and senior in business administration.

"We would have liked to have seen more people attend, because its really a great facility, but we didn't publicize this very much," he said.

Visitors were allowed to roam the concourse and arena areas. Some areas, however, were still closed to the public. Lubbers said some landscaping and the Legends Room still need to be completed. The Legends Room is a hospitality room for alumni and can also be used for University functions.

"There's still a little finishing work to be done, like air balancing and lighting," said Charlie Thomas, director of the coliseum.

13.500 for basketball.

They wanted the front row five feet away from the court and I think we've got that or maybe closer," Thomas said.

Three rows of removable benches will be added in front of the east side permanent seating section for basketball games, leaving about three feet of open space between the court and the benches.

Seating consists of 2,900 purple plastic chairback seats on the west side, with the remaining metal bleacher seats set in concrete.

The team benches and the scoring and press tables will be on the west side at floor level. In Ahearn Field House the press box was above the seating sections.

The women's and two visiting locker rooms have gray carpeting and purple lockers. The men's locker room has walnut-colored paneling covering the lockers. Sofas and chairs will be moved into the locker rooms for concerts, which will be used as a backstage area. Thomas said the NAIA, a junior college athletic organization and the Kansas State High School Athletic Association have inquired about the use of the coliseum for post-season tournaments.

"I think it will be excellent for all The coliseum will seat about of us and excellent for recruiting also," Thomas said.

> Thomas said more than 1,000 tickets had been sold for the official opening of the coliseum Friday night. He said he expects between 1,500 to 2,000 people to attend the $35 per ticket event.

TOPEKA - The 1989 Legislature will bring Washburn University under the control of the State Board of Regents, the chairman of the powerful House Appropriations Committee predicted Monday.

Rep. Bill Bunten, R-Topeka, said support from Republican Gov. Mike Hayden and a legislative strategy of tying Washburn's status to community college financing would gain enough votes to bring Washburn into the system. Bunten is a strong Hayden ally, having served as budget committee chairman when Hayden was House speaker in 1983-86.

Other Topeka legislators were less optimistic, and Hayden's press secretary, Kathy Peterson, was noncommittal about how strongly the governor will push for the change during the 1989 Legislature.

"The truth of the matter is that this system," Bunten said during a community meeting sponsored by the Kansas Chamber of Commerce and Industry. "It either comes in this year, or it doesn't come in for a long

Washburn currently is the only municipal university in the state, and the State Board of Education oversees its operation. The state provides part of its financing, as do tuition rates higher than those at regents schools.

Peterson said Hayden has not decided how strongly he'll push for Washburn's admission to the regents system. The 1988 Legislature killed a bill that would have switched Washburn's financing to the regents, which many lawmakers considered the first step to making Washburn a state university.

She also acknowleged Hayden is thinking about getting community college support for the plan in is the year Washburn comes into the exchange for increased aid. Bunten said such an alliance would garner votes from legislators whose districts include community colleges. "There's been discussion about linking the two issues," Peterson

Rep. Jim Lowther, R-Emporia, said linking the two issues would amount to a "strong-arm" tactic. Lowther is an outspoken opponent of bringing Washburn into the system and a member of the House Appropriations Committee.

"The last time I looked, they didn't have the votes," Lowther said. "But things change. I can see that those kinds of pressures may eventually get votes.

Opposition to bringing Washburn into the regents traditionally has come from legislators with regents universities in their districts. They have said financing Washburn fully could cost other universities money

Convocation lecturer to speak on Hispanic cultures tonight

By Amy Lyons Collegian Reporter

The man who helped bring the ecological revolution to fruition will deliver tonight's Convocation lecture at 7:30 in McCain Auditorium.

Stewart Udall, U.S. Secretary of the Interior from 1961 to 1969 and a supporter of the tall grass prairie national parks system, will speak on the topic of "Coronado and the North American Grassland," said Peg Wherry, Convocation lecture series chairwoman.

Wherry said Udall's speech topic is reflective of his most recent book, "To the Inland Empire: Coronado and the Spanish Legacy." The book is a look at Hispanic contributions to society and a pictorial view of the Southwest.

universities need minority students Kansas

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA - Kansas colleges and universities cannot increase the number of minority faculty members they have until they recruit more minority students and that will take a concerted effort, participants in a higher education conference were told

"There just aren't enough minority students in Kansas to fill the needs of our institutions and get the numbers up to what the regents and our institutions consider acceptable," said Barb Mawhiney, assistant dean of faculties for personnel at Wichita State University.

It means, she said, that Kansas colleges and universities must recruit black and other minority students from other states. Until more minority students, who will remain in the state, are educated at Kansas institutions the schools are going to have difficulty adding minority faculty members, she said.

Ms. Mawhiney was a member of a panel addressing the issue of recruiting and retaining minorities in higher education at the annual Kansas Conference on Postsecondary Education, sponsored by the Legislative Educational Planning Committee.

Another panel discussed tuition savings plans, with speakers telling the conference that parents must get into the habit of saving for their children's college education, and the federal government must change its rules on what constitutes need in awarding grant and scholarship

There is a need in Kansas, Ms. Mawhiney said, "to radically improve the number of minority faculty members" at the state's colleges and universities.

"Certainly there needs to be a far greater effort to recruit minority faculty that are available. (But) without minority students, you obviously aren't going to have minority people in the pipeline," she said.

That means Kansas institutions of higher learning must beef up their efforts to recruit minority students and keep them, so more of them are likely to stay in the state as potential faculty members.

The effort will require increased funding for recruitment programs, pooling of resources, exchanges of information among the regents' universities, and demonstrating that getting more minorities is a high priority, Ms. Mawhiney said.

Another panelist, Patricia Caruthers, assistant to the president at Kansas City, Kan., Community College and a former member of the state Board of Regents, said community colleges can play a vital role in recruiting and retaining minority students because they are easier to get into and cost less.

Unless the community college system is preserved and improved, she said, "I contend that access to higher education will only be for the affluent."

Among tuition savings panelists were Don Mullis, who administers a tuition savings program in the state of Kentucky, and Mark Tallman of Associated Students of Kansas.

'What it comes down to is to get the family to do it (save for college)," said Tallman. "Parents must make a decision to put something away on a regular basis."

He said families find it more difficult to save today than in former years because of the increased burden of social security and health care

"The first step is to raise public awareness," said Tallman. "We've got to alert parents before their children reach 18."

State Sen. Alicia Salisbury, R-Topeka, said there is a disincentive for parents to save because federal student assistance programs base the need for grants and scholarships on Retirement System (KPERS).

the family's resources, and students whose parents have saved for their education are penalized for that

Mullins said, "The federal government is going to have to do something to assist us."

Two Kansas legislators, Reps. Elaine Hassler, R-Abilene, and Rick Bowden, D-Goddard, introduced a bill last session that would create a savings program in Kansas similar to ones in Kentucky and Michigan.

Under the Hassler-Bowden proposal, parents could pay into a savings plan and draw interest on their money, which would be invested by a quasi-governmental state board similar to the Kansas Public Employees

New minimum wage unlikely

WASHINGTON - Senate Democrats said Monday that Republicans have effectively killed chances of raising the $3.35 minimum wage this year through a five-day filibuster.

"There is no point in our continuing to pound on their door," said Senate Majority Leader Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va. "I'm now conceding that the Republican filibuster was successful. I regret that. I would have liked to have seen this bill passed by the 100th Congress."

The bill by Scn. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., would have raised the wage floor, which has been at its present level since 1981, to $3.75 in January, $4.15 in 1990 and $4.55 in 1991. Kennedy said it would have directly benefited some 15 million workers now paid less than $4.55 an hour. "I think it's a pretty good result," said Republican Leader Bob Dole of Kansas. "This bill couldn't pass the House. It wasn't going to pass the Senate unless it was modified."

Gunman kills 1 in school

GREENWOOD, S.C. - A gunman walked into an elementary school and opened fire Monday, killing an 8-year-old girl and injuring 10 other people, authorities said.

Police Chief James Coursey said James William Wilson, 19, of Greenwood had been arrested and charged with murder. No motive for the shootings was determined. Wilson was being held at the Greenwood Law Enforcement Center.

Coursey said that shortly after 11 a.m., Wilson entered Oakland Elementary School's front door, walked to the cafeteria, pulled a .22 caliber, nine-shot revolver from his belt and opened fire, injuring one teacher and three students.

Wilson left the cafeteria and entered a girl's restroom where teacher Kat Finkbeiner tried to prevent him from leaving after he reloaded, Coursey said.

In the scuffle that followed, Finkbeiner was shot in the mouth and hand, he said.

Coursey said Wilson evaded Finkbeiner and entered a classroom two doors away, where he opened fire again, injuring a teacher and five students and killing one of the students.

After firing all bullets in his pistol, Wilson dropped the weapon and Finkbeiner, unarmed, ordered him to raise his hands and stand until a police officer arrived.

NEW YORK - Citing the Iran-Iraq cease-fire agreement, the Reagan administration said Monday it will end America's shipescorting operation in the Persian Gulf while maintaining a pre-

President Reagan's decision to terminate the close-quarter convoying of neutral commercial ships came after U.S. officials reviewed how the Aug. 20 cease-fire was working, said White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater.

The move substantially lowers the U.S. profile in the troubled waters nearly three months after a U.S. Navy Aegis cruiser shot down an Iranian civilian airliner with 290 people on board. The United States said it regretted the accident, and officials have been weighing a program to compensate relatives of the victims.

Candidates renew criticism

Michael Dukakis and George Bush exchanged post-debate jabs from a distance Monday, the Democrat saying his rival would "lead America nowhere" and the vice president charging his opponent with trying to obscure a liberal past.

The two candidates renewed campaign hostilities as their aides waited for the impact of Sunday night's nationally televised debate to show up in the close race for the White House. The first polls rated the 90-minute confrontation a tossup, and Bush himself said he thought the debate went "kind of about even."

Dukakis moved to exploit the debate to his advantage as aides rushed two new television commercials into production containing snippets of his performance. One shows the Democrat delivering a portion of his closing debate statement, saying: "The best America is not behind us. The best America is yet

Bush joined running mate Dan Quayle at a campaign rally in Jackson, Tenn., and said, "One debate down. How'd I do." The crowd cheered and Quayle provided the answer, declaring Bush

But Bush said later at a barbecue near Atlanta, "I thought it was kind of about even."

Teen-ager researches cancer

LOS ANGELES - When Ray Bateman Jr. presents his paper on fighting colon cancer at a clinical research conference next month, he might raise academic eyebrows. Not at his findings, but at his being only 14.

Bateman's co-researcher and next-door neighbor, cancer specialist Dr. Glenn Tisman, said even if the adolescent's voice cracks a little, few will doubt his competence by the end of his presentation.

"Working with him was like working with a (post-doctoral) fellow," Tisman said. "His abilities are remarkable and he was full of knowledge about chemistry even though he hasn't ever taken a chemistry course in school."

Bateman, a high school freshman and computer whiz, spent more than 1,300 hours researching the project, Tisman said.
"But he's still a kid, basically," Tisman added. "My lab technician used to complain that Ray would leave his candy wrappers laying around."

Welfare overhaul designed

WASHINGTON - Leaders of Senate, House and White House negotiating teams reached agreement Monday on the terms of a welfare overhaul designed to wean people from public assistance and teach them to support their families.

The breakthrough followed months of talks among lawmakers and officials with deep philosophical differences over welfare and work requirements, and the agreement still must be sold to their colleagues.

But Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, chairman of the conferees, and other key participants in Monday's meeting said they expected their product to become law.

Bentsen, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee and the Democratic vice presidential nominee, called Monday's compromise "a good final resolution of the differences. I think it's an excellent compromise. The administration, I think, has signed off."

"If it's OK with the conferees and if it comes down the way I understand it, it's probably OK," said Charles Hobbs, President Reagan's domestic policy adviser.

Union check-cashing facilities accommodate students daily

By Guy Peverley Collegian Reporter

Every weekday, hundreds of K-Staters use the Union check-cashing facility, which has been available for 32 years. An average of 800 to 900 people use the check-cashing facility daily. On a busy day, more than 1,000 people use it, said Jack Thoman, Union accountant.

"Our biggest days are Fridays and holidays before students go home," Thoman said.

The facility differs from some banks in that it makes no service charge. There is, however, a $10 charge on all returned checks, Tho-man said. An average of four to 10 bad checks are written a day, he said. During peak purchasing weeks, such as enrollment and book-buying periods, the average can be 19 to 20 a

When a bad check is written to the Union, the individual is placed on the non-acceptable check list until the deficiency is resolved, Thoman said.

The person is notified and allowed seven days to correct the problem. If the deficiency isn't corrected during this time, the check is turned over to the county attorney's office, he said.

Checks may also be given to the Manhattan Credit Bureau or outside agencies for prosecution or collection, according to Union policy.

Three returned checks within a semester cause the individual to be placed on the Union's nonacceptable check list for the remainder of the semester or for two months, whichever is longer, Thoman said.

The Union's policy is not to redeposit a bad check, he said. If the Carole Rood, Union check cashier.

check doesn't clear the second time, that person's returned-check charges are doubled.

"It doesn't help to forget about the problem and hope it goes away," Thoman said. "Because it won't."

The check-cashing facility is open from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Monday through Friday. Cashiers will accept first-party and second-party checks, with a maximum amount of $50 per person per day, he said.

After-hours check cashing can be done at the information desk adjacent to the facility. Checks for up to $10 can be written until 9:30 p.m. on weekdays and from 8 a.m. to 9:30 p.m. on Saturdays.

Checks must bear the individual's Manhattan address, telephone number and social security number, said

United Way fund drive begins

By Mary Gomez Collegian Reporter

President Jon Wefald helped kick off the K-State United Way fund drive Monday morning by presenting the first pledge of the 21/2 -week

Wefald and other top administrators were present at the breakfast/ training meeting to sign and present personal pledges to Nancy Denning, United Way Riley County chairwoman, and Larry Erpelding, United Way campus drive chairman.

"We're looking for contributions at any level," Wefald said. "Whatever people can afford."

A group of United Way volunteers made of employees from each at the meeting. The annual campus Big Sisters. campaign is aimed at employees of the University.

The students' role in the campus United Way is volunteering time, rather than donating money.

"We're certainly not asking students to contribute money," Erpelding said. "We realize that most students aren't earning a wage or salary and are hard-pressed financially. Their priority is to obtain a good education."

Students involved with Circle K International, a campus organization, also have helped promote the drive. Students contribute time during the year to different agencies funded by United Way, such as the Flint Hills

New Patriotism: Shortcut to being a good American

"The man at the top of our ticket, George Bush, is a life member of the National Rifle Association, while Mr. Dukakis boasts that he is a card-carrying member of the American Civil Liberties Union." - Dan Quayle he assertion is preposterous - Bush is good because he supports the right to bear arms, Dukakis is evil because he believes in civil rights. In other words, the Second Amendment is essential to freedom, while the rest of the Bill of Rights is dangerous trash.

Granted, both the NRA and the ACLU often go to unsavory extremes. The ACLU will defend any and all criminals, while the NRA will see to it that the criminals are properly armed. But to claim that the NRA stands on higher moral ground than the ACLU is ludicrous. The ACLU fought for the Civil Rights Act of 1964, which George Bush opposed, and has played a vital role in many important court decisions concerning personal freedoms, freedoms even Quayle and Bush enjoy. The NRA's big victory, the right to buy a Saturday Night Special, a "handgun for sport," pales in comparison.

A few weeks ago in Texas, George Bush derided the ACLU as not embodying "Texas values." In Kentucky, he deemed the ACLU offensive to "Kentucky values." And if he comes to Kansas, you can bet he will talk about "Kansas values." Indeed, he will do this across most of rural America, and crowds of flag-waving ignoramuses will cheer in delight.

Those of us who live in and love rural America, but somehow find civil rights to be part of our values, will feel terribly left out. If we care more about freedom of worship than gun ownership, we will find Bush's rural rhetoric condescending and offensive. Indeed, he doesn't try the same thing on the coasts. There, it's Bush the environmentalist, Bush the child care advocate, i.e. Bush the sensible

But put him smack dab in the middle of Hicksville, U.S.A., and it's a different story. Bush, along with most other politicians, seems to think that we country folk are motivated by fear alone. To us, the words "civil rights" are supposed to be associated with the candy-ass lawyer in the "Dirty Harry" movies who gets the ax-murderer-rapistanarchist out of jail on a technicality.

Moreover, "liberals" are people from cities who live in macrame-strewn apartments, eat tofu and burn the calories with a Jane Fonda workout tape. And, because liberals live in cities, we can see why cities are crime-ridden holes of dirty heroin needles and disease. Thus, who wouldn't fear liberals?

Just listen to Bush's speeches at county fairs and Elks Club meetings. He begins with some Red baiting. Note that the repetition of the phrase "card-carrying" is reminiscent of Sen. Joseph McCarthy's "card-carrying comCommentary munist." He closes with talk of the "new wave of patriotism" and a recitation of the Pledge of Allegiance.

MARK SCHMELLER

Collegian Columnist

New wave indeed. Patriotism used to be the love of country - its institutions, aspirations and freedoms - as well as the willingness to go out of the way to support them. All of them. The patriotism of George Bush is or one thing, it does not spring from America's greatness so as to make itself evident to all. It must be encouraged, if not mandated, through the rote recitation of a pledge. Yet, requiring the Pledge in schools seems to be more of a retreat into self-doubt about the worthiness of our country than a celebration of American

Secondly, new patriots want a stronger nation, but seem unwilling to support it. Better defense, education, health and child care are all desired, but higher taxes are not. Why are these people, who are so willing to pledge their allegiance to their country, not willing to pledge their checkbooks? Don't patriots put values and country ahead of personal

Indeed, being a patriot no longer seems to require great sacrifices. George Bush called Dan Quayle a patriot because "he didn't burn his draft card and go to Canada during Vietnam." Instead, he stayed in Indiana and wrote copy for a National Guard newspaper. He could have gone to Vietnam. In fact, his draft number came up. By doing the very least that was required of him, he became a

And herein lies the great appeal of the new patriotism. By fulfilling the slightest moral, ethical, financial or legal obligation, you too can become a patriot. I had never thought of myself as much of a patriot until Dan Quayle came along. But here I am writing for a newspaper, clear of any war zone, and I have never burned or damaged my selective service card in any way. As a matter of fact, last week I had it laminated.

The Pledge of Allegiance is the perfect manifestation of new patriotism. It takes about 13 seconds to recite. Everyone knows it, and if you don't, you can just mumble along with the crowd. Moreover, once you've said it for the day, you're a patriot. You can do no wrong.

At least, that is what Congress thinks. I flipped on the television last week to see the entire House of Representatives reciting the Pledge. It's strange to watch grown men and women recite something you recited in grade school. You begin to think they will launch into their ABCs or play red rover.

ut the really great thing about "new patriotism" is that it is the answer to all the country-folk fears that candidates like Bush try to stir up. If members of Congress say the Pledge before each session, they must be patriots, not selfserving, weak-kneed political twits. If a presidential candidate says the Pledge and waves the flag, he cannot possibly be an overly ambitious sleazoid. Most importantly, if our children are made to say it, they won't grow up to be long-haired punks who cavort with ethnic types, sell their bodies for drugs and read socialist literature.

This is not to say that there is anything wrong with the Pledge of Allegiance. Nor is there anything wrong with patriotism. However, there is something wrong with trying to change it from a sentiment to a solution for the problems of a nation. And there is something really offensive about candidates coming to rural America and telling us what our values, hopes and fears are. I'd rather they cut the bull, tell us what they really believe, and let us decide from there.

That would be nice — like democracy.

Stand should be taken

As one of 100 universities engaged in research for the U.S. Army's Biological Defense Program, K-State has been confronted with some serious ethical questions. These include questions about the impact of university research on society, about the function of a university and its independence with respect decide for themselves what to research - in effect, to have no socially responsible research guidelines. While this may be a convenient way to avoid a lot of ethical questions, it hardly seems consistent with the University's self-proclaimed role as an educator of morally responsible adults.

Another option would be for the good people of Anderson Hall to jump right in, set up a committee and, in positivist fashion, announce a set of hard and fast guidelines for deciding what research is and isn't socially responsible.

Would such guidelines state, for example, that military-funded projects were socially unresponsible? To do so would overlook that nuclear weapons production is carried on under the auspices of the Department of Energy, and that the Departments of Commerce, Energy and Interior fund research for the Biological Defense Program.

Further, as one high-ranking administrator recently revealed, K-State laser research has almost certainly been used for the Strategic Defense Initiative, a program which, despite its name, Perhaps this says something about the University's accepting only "defensive" research proposals and about the assurances from the administration that K-State is not engaging in "offensive" research. But whatever the administration does, it should cease to classify ipso facto all present University research projects as "defensive" - because it clearly has no guidelines to make such decisions, and, as in the case of K-State SDI research, because such decisions are themselves highly questionable.

Keep campout

I am an avid fan of K-State basketball. I also strongly support the current method of camping out for tickets, because it is fun and traditional.

Many of the criticisms people have about camping out are very questionable. Some of

1. Some say we could find a better way what? I can think of one. What about the lottery? Great for the first few groups, but what about the others? Camping out determines who wants the few "choice" tickets more. I'll admit that starting the campout a month early was ridiculous, but I think the purple flag plan will solve that problem.

2. It was also said that this method reflects poorly on the athletic department. I think the effect is completely opposite. It has gotten K-State recognized throughout the nation for having such an outstanding and supportive group of fans.

3. Another criticism is that the campout causes a lot of students to skip class. Many students skip class without having campout for an excuse. Most people I know who have skipped or been late to class, including myself, have only done it when they knew they could make it up or get the notes from someone else.

4. The question was raised about why we are here, for basketball or to get an education? The obvious answer, is that we're here to get an education. If we weren't, I doubt most of us would have spent so much money to be here. Basketball at K-State is an extra. A great extra, and I think it's wonderful to see so many different people get together to show their support for the University.

Exchange bad idea

Your suggestion of a book exchange (Sept. 21 editorial) is a good one, except that it ignores the principle of free enterprise. "Texthook Savers" is a great idea, and its owner is entitled to make a reasonable profit as compensation for that idea and the effort it required to make it work.

The important lesson is that governments, at any level, cannot create anything - they are the agents of redistribution. When governments use that power to solve social problems, we all benefit. But when that power is used to undermine free enterprise, we all lose. Competition is one of the freedoms that created our society - let's not give it up now.

No laughing matter

I would like to respond to the Thursday's column titled "Smokeless Cigarettes." It is very unfortunate that the columnist is so busy that she obviously didn't have the time to really reflect on the effects that each person has on the others that they must share this world with.

Her sarcasm is unappreciated when discussing the serious effects of smoking to unborn babies and the severe health hazards smoking causes the smoker and anyone who is unfortunate enough to have to work or live in close quarters with a smoker. Anyone who has seen people coughing for the first two hours after they wake up, or wheeze after walking up a stair flight, or waited for a loved one to die because of the cancer inside his/her body, or lived with constant fear that today he/she will have another heart attack - this one might be the last - then you realize that this is not something to be made light of. After you get through the cost in human suffering and personal tragedy that results from smoking, you can (if you are still alive) start assessing the socio-economic effects.

The cost of medical care is outrageous, and guess who helps pay for all the smokers' care when they have polluted their bodies so long that the body says it has had enough and revolts in disease. Everyone that pays taxes and/or health insurance is paying for the smokers "right" to pollute, this "right" that supposedly affects no one but them. Whether the cigarettes are smokeless or not, the suffering is still the same. Think about it.

"If smokers wish to pollute themselves without polluting others, why shouldn't they?" Because they are "polluting" others by inflicting emotional, physical (pregnant women), and financial burdens on the rest of society that can be avoided. The songwriter certainly knew what he was saying when he wrote "No Man Is an Island." Our actions do affect a great deal of people.

Volleyball squad attempts to end its losing streak

By Mike May Sports Writer

K-State's volleyball squad will attempt to return to its winning ways tonight in Wichita, as the 'Cats tangle with Wichita State University for the second time this season. Match time is 7:30 p.m. at the Heskett Center.

The 'Cats got off to their best start ever by posting wins in their first eight matches. The team ran into trouble, however, over the weekend. At the University of Nebraska Invitational, the Wildcats dropped three matches, including losses to Nebraska and the University of Wyoming, both nationally-ranked.

"We strayed away from our strengths," coach Scott Nelson said. "This past weekend we got out of our style, the style that we need to have."

The Shockers gave K-State all it wanted in the team's first match, played in Manhattan. Wichita State took the first two games before the Wildcats rallied to win, 12-15, 13-15, 15-6, 15-6, 15-3.

Nelson is not overlooking the K-State enters this match as the fifth-best serving team in the nation, averaging 3.3 aces per game. In the 10 games in the tournament at Nebraska, however, the Wildcats had only 13 aces, while serving 35 errors.

That's a statistic the 'Cats will have to improve to be successful, Nelson said.

"We have to serve tough. We have to play solid first-ball offense, and we must play good defense."

With the first Big Eight match scheduled for Friday, the Wildcats will need to return to its early-season success - success that found the Wildcats ranked eighth in the Mideast Region for the first time

"It is important for us to get back to basics. If we do that, we have a chance to win. (The Nebraska tournament) was the first time this season that we have diverged from our strengths. We need to get back and start doing the things that make us a good volleyball team," Nelson said.

The Wildcats travel to Ames Friday to battle Iowa State University, which finished third in the conference last season.

K-State's next home game isn't until Oct. 7, when the 'Cats play host to the University of Colorado. The Wildcats have seven consecutive road games before then.

Missouri, Iowa State coaches console young kickers

By The Associated Press

Both Woody Widenhofer of Missouri and Jim Walden of Iowa State found themselves giving a reassuring pat on the back to youngsters whose kicks could have delivered victory had they sailed true.

In losing 10-3 Saturday to Iowa, Walden's normally reliable Jeff Shudak missed four kicks. In Missouri's 28-28 tie of Indiana, freshman Jeff Jacke missed a 22-yarder with :04 remaining. Adding to Jacke's distress was the fact that it was his first attempt at both a game-winning and a college field goal.

"I gave him a big hug and kiss and told him to get his head up and let's get on with it," Widenhofer said Monday during the Big Eight coaches' weekly news conference.

Walden was quick to point out that Shudak was not exactly taking chip

"He hit a 51-yarder and it almost grazed the bar into the wind," Walden said. " A 55-yarder with the wind hit the left upright. Then he shanked one bad. He's hit one bad kick, the only ball I've seen him hit bad in two years. Well, my gosh, after a thousand kicks, he's not a machine. I have great confidence in Jeff Shudak."

At the same time, however, Widenhofer does not sound like a man whose patience in these matters is got to make the kick," Widenhofer said. "There was as much pressure on the extra point to make it 28-28. You've got to make the kick."

One happy place on the Missouri landscape is at quarterback. John Stollenwerck, in danger of losing his job with another poor game, responded against Indiana with one of his best.

"He did an outstanding job of throwing the ball," Widenhofer said. "He had two or three balls dropped, and moved the team very well. He had his best day at Missouri."

The Pac Ten's top two teams are now 2-0 against Nebraska and Okla-

"How much pressure is it? You've lost Saturday to Southern Cal. Whether they like it or not, Big Eight officials are prepared to listen to reports of their league's decline.

> "I don't know if it necessarily means Oklahoma and Nebraska are bad teams," said Nebraska Coach Tom Osborne. "But certainly UCLA and USC had their day. But there are other years the situation has been reversed."

Beating Ariozona State Saturday gave Osborne his 150th victory as a head coach.

"It shows if you live long enough and coach long enough, you win your share of games," he said. "It reflects on a lot of people, coaches, players homa for the year after Oklahoma and good facilities. And of course, our fans have been exceptional, 157 straight sellouts. Tremendous fan support has had a lot to do with it."

Oklahoma coach Barry Switzer's reputation for candor remains intact. Many observers expected major knee surgery to slow Jamelle Holieway, his wishbone quarterback deluxe. Now, after the loss Saturday to USC, Switzer sadly says it's true.

"Obviously, Jamelle is not what he used to be. He lost some speed and quickness," Switzer said. "He's not physically the same player. We got out last year's films and our game against UCLA two years ago. He wore them out with speed and quickness. It's just not the same."

So expect to see more of Charles running and kickoff returns.

Thompson, the lightning bug of a backup.

"Jamelle does a lot of things so well in execution," Switzer said. "But Charles is so much faster and quicker."

The team from Oklahoma with the big win Saturday was Oklahoma State, whose 52-15 rout of Texas A&M surprised even head coach Pat

"It was probably as good a first half as we've had against quality competition in the 10 years I've been around here," Jones said.

Johnson stripped of gold medal after positive test for steroids

Olympic Briefly

By The Associated Press

SEOUL, South Korea - Ben Johnson was stripped Tuesday of his record-setting victory in the 100-meter dash after testing positive for steroids, and the Olympic gold medal was awarded to American Carl Lewis.

The news blackened what had been the brightest moment of the Seoul Olympics and revived Lewis' bid for an unprecedented second sweep of four golds: the 100 and 200-meter dashes, the long jump and the 400-meter relay. He won the long jump Monday.

International Olympic Committee spokeswoman Michele Verdier said traces of Stanozolol, a water-based anabolic steroid generally thought almost impossible to detect, were found in Johnson's urine sample after Saturday's race. The IOC executive board unanimously approved its medical commission's recommendation that the medal be Olympics to be stripped of a gold medal, was flying home to Toronto, leaving Olympic officials shaken and Canadian coaches stunned.

"The only thing we can say at this stage is that it is a tragedy, a mistake or a sabotage," said Johnson's manager, Larry Heidebrecht. "Up to five days before the race, Ben was in perfect condition. Something has happened in those days.

We do not know what happened and how it happened, but apparently somebody has sabotaged Ben and we will find out who it was and how it was done."

Verdier said traces of stanozolol, a water-based steroid, were found in a urine sample taken Saturday's race.

She noted a Canadian contention of sabotage, that the substance might have been administered to Johnson after the race, and said, "The steroid profile is not consistent with such a claim."

Organizations push voter registration

By Jody Hundley Collegian Reporter

Registering students to vote in the November general elections is a concern for the K-State Young Democrats and K-State's Associated Students of Kansas, two campus groups that are part of a statewide push for student

Student Body President Troy Lubbers said ASK, a legislative assembly made up of the student body presidents from the seven Kansas Board of Regents schools, discussed policies and priorities at a recent meeting.

"Our main issue this year is voter registration and education," Lubbers said. "(The meeting) was mainly a strategies and goalsetting session."

Lubbers said students have until Oct. 18 (20 days before the election) to register. Students can register at the Student Government Services office in the Union.

Rob Brown, sophomore in political science and leader of the K-State Young Democrats, said his group is part of a citywide effort to make voters aware.

"We're helping in an effort, as far as voter registration, by going door-to-door in Manhattan," he said. "We're working in conjunction with Manhattan Alliance for Central America, the Democratic Party, the Young Democrats and the local Carpenter's Union."

Brown said the main focus of the Young Democrats is making students aware of Democratic candidate Michael Dukakis.

The group is also sponsoring forums, a time for students to "meet the candidates" in either local or county races, Brown said.

The Young Democrats have had a table in the Union since Sept. 14., open between 10 a.m. and 2 p.m. on Wednesdays, Thursdays and Fridays, and as often as possible until the November election, Brown said.

In the last week, he said, four students have asked where they can register.

"We send them down to the SGS office. Of the four, we know that two of them have come back and taken pamphlets about the candidates," he said.

K-State's ASK group is also beginning its drive for student voter registation.

Scott King, senior in political science and pre-law and campus director of ASK, said the group will have a voter registration drive Oct. 4 and 5. Tables will be in Farrell Library and Cardwell Hall. They will be manned by Mortar Board members from 9 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. as part of its service project.

"The drive was cleared by the Riley County clerk's office, which coordinates all drives in the county," King said. "Voter registration cards will be available for students."

Students' parents can either get an absentee ballot for them from the county clerk's office in their home county, or they can call the clerk's office themselves.

Interns get involved with Senate

By Kendra Gensemer Collegian Reporter

Student Senate encourages involvement in student government and has many programs to enhance involvement opportunities. One such opportunity is the Senate Intern program.

The program gives students the chance to get directly involved in Senate without actually running for "It is designed for people interested in getting involved in Senate specifically, but unsure about getting elected or unsure about the time commitment," said Mary Jo Lampe, senior in apparel and textiles marketing and chairwoman of Senate operations standing committee.

"It's a great opportunity for students. They can really get involved with the workings on campus. Interns play a big part in what we do," said Doug Heller, senior in environmental design and student senator coordinating the internship

Lampe said the 12 members composing the program attend meetings, assist senators with research, help with Senate projects, do library research, and make phone calls for surveys and information.

Each intern is directly responsible for assisting four or five senators. Although senators are required to be at meetings until business is finished, interns are only required to stay until 9 p.m., Lampe said.

Interns also receive one hour of Services office in the Union.

credit per semester, she said.

"It's just like (being) a senator," said Melissa Blumel, junior in secondary education and student senator from the College of Education.

The program is open to students from all colleges and all classifications, Lampe said. Senate is looking for students who show interest, desire and enthusiasm for student government.

smuggling allegations arise

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - A group of prominent trial lawyers announced Monday it hopes to investigate allegations of government involvement in drug smuggling by joining a court battle to win damages for a Kansas businessman whose airplane was destroyed in an undercover operation.

Ted Warshafsky, a noted plaintiff's attorney from Milwaukee, Wis., told a news conference here that sworn testimony in the case raised questions of whether government agents had tolerated drug smuggling or deals with drug smugglers. The apparent failure to get to the bottom of such charges had attracted him to the case, he said. "It's disgusting if true," Warshafs-

Warshafsky plans to become lead counsel for Walter R. Conlogue, 48, formerly of Wichita, Kan., and now living in Wilmington, N.C., who has sued the government for destroying his airplane, a twin-engine turboprop Beech King Air.

"What happened to Mr. Conlogue was outrageous." Warshafsky said. "We intend to obtain justice for Mr. Conlogue - to get the government to pay him - and, to the extent possible under the law, investigate the government's alleged involvement in drug smuggling activities."

Warshafsky and three other attorneys are contributing their services under the auspices of Trial Lawyers for Public Justice, a public interest law firm here that attempts to expose and correct corporate and government misconduct through damage and trial litigation. Warshafsky is past president of the group.

The law firm uses a national network of 550 plaintiff's trial lawyers, including some of the most prominent, to take on precedent-setting or nationally significant cases. It has successfully sued W.R. Grace Co. for contaminating the drinking water of Woburn, Mass., and Temple University for discriminating against women in intercollegiate athletics.

The case has languished for more than five years in U.S. District Court in Wichita, as Conlogue, owner of American Aircraft, Inc., has attempted to recover damages for the Conlogue told the news conference he had invested $238,000 in the plane in addition to carrying a $195,000 debt on it. He said at the request of Customs Service agenct Irmie Blanton of Jacksonville, Fla., he leased the plane to Customs Service informant Frank Raia on Dec. 22, 1982 for $15,000 for use in an undercover operation.

On Jan. 3, 1983, the plane ran out of fuel and crashed just off Grand Cayman Island in the Caribbean. The pilot, Michael Toliver, later said he had been flying marijuana in it at the

Toliver, who was imprisoned on other charges, testified in the case under immunity last year that in 1986 he from time to time flew weapons to Central America and then returned to the United States with drugs aboard. He testified that in March 1986 he landed an aircraft carrying drugs on Homestead Air Force Base in Florida and was paid $75,000 by former CIA agent Felix Rodriquez, who was a central figure in the Iran-Contra affair for his work aiding the Nicarahis colleagues did not know whether there was any truth to Toliver's charge but that efforts to have it fully investigated appeared to have gotten nowhere.

Blanton also testified under oath in 1986 that he told Conlogue that he should make "whatever financial

"The national park idea originated in the United States over a century ago," Udall wrote. "The essence of this concept was that a country should identify samples of the finest landscapes and preserve them untrammeled for society."

Instead of conducting a questionand-answer session after his speech. Udall will visit with individuals at a reception in Farrell Library. In addition, Carol Chelz, co-manager of Claflin Books, said there would be copies of "To the Inland Empire" available for Udall to sign.

Chelz said an updated version of "The Quiet Crisis," a book about the use and protection of natural resources, will be available for purchase in Manhattan in October.

"The Quiet Crisis" was a bestseller when it was published in 1963. Udall wrote that it advanced "the proposition that men must completely grasp the relationship between human stewardship and the fullness of the American earth."

Alumni recall college

By Amy Bullock Collegian Reporter

It was the afternoon of Oct. 23 and the 5,000 K-State students attending the Saturday football game clapped and sang "Aggie Loyalty," Kansas State Agricultural College's fight song.

The year was 1915, and the game was the first Homecoming game for the college, which was later named Kansas State

According to a 1947 Collegian, "Jawn"

Bender, the 1915 football coach, came up with the idea of having a Homecoming during his first year as coach. He proposed that a day should be set aside to honor alumni.

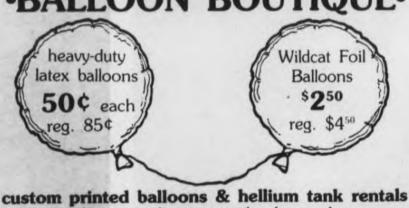

The first Homecoming game, which was on a Saturday, was against none other than the University of Kansas. An account of events from the 1916 Royal Purple yearbook said an SOS call was broadcast across the country asking former Aggies (K-Staters) to come to Manhattan to help cheer and "beat KU."

Special invitations were sent to former Aggie football players, asking them to attend a pep rally the Friday night before the game. Players who had not received the letter K, which denoted they were on the football team, while they were in school, were presented with the emblem at the band arrived by train and were met by the Aggie band. The two bands, along with nearly 1,000 people, marched to the field, which was located at Memorial Stadium. By 2 p.m., 5,000 K-State fans settled down to watch the first Homecoming football

About 2,500 people watched the former players receive their letters and showed support for the team.

After the third quarter, the Aggies were winning the game, 7 to 6, but KU scored 19 points in the fourth quarter to win the game.

Although K-State lost the game, a tradition was started.

Russell Thackery, who graduated with a degree in journalism in 1927, said he remembers an array of activities surrounding Homecoming when he was in school.

"Every organization on campus seemed to participate. There would be a parade that went downtown and through Aggieville. It seems to me that every organization on campus would have something in that parade. We would even have a campus clean-up the week of Homecoming, and people would be plucking up weeds and dandelions," he said.

A 1930 issue of the Collegian published the agenda for Homecoming week. It included a pep rally Friday night, registration of alumni on Saturday morning, an alumni luncheon at noon Saturday, and the game itself. Open house was scheduled for the sororities and fraternities on Friday and Saturday nights. The Homecoming dance capped off the weekend on Saturday night.

One Homecoming with special signifi-cance is the 1938 Homecoming, which was the University's 75th anniversary. This year's Homecoming activities will celebrate the University's 125th anniversary.

The 1943 Homecoming was also memorable because of World War II. According to a 1943 account in the Industrialist, an alumni paper, the 1943 Homecoming was attended by few, but was one of the most inspirational in history. The people at the Homecoming decided the Alumni Association should petition the proper authorities of the U.S. Army in order to liberalize regulations to allow soldiers attending colleges and universities to participate in intercollegiate athletics.

In 1947, Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower attended K-State's Homecoming. It would be six more years before he became president of the United States, but in 1947 he was Kansas' war hero.

Sororities, fraternities and independent organizations participated in the parade that Eisenhower attended. An Oct. 24, 1947, issue of the Collegian reminded students to be on their best behavior and to remember, "What you do reflects upon your college and the city of Manhattan. Let us do all the right things at the right time."

In 1952, K-State had another special guest for Homecoming. Roderick Cameron, an 1884 K-State graduate, compared the K-State he had attended to the K-State

An Oct. 3, 1952, Collegian reports that Cameron gave a radio speech on KSAC and told of how he used to walk from what is now the Methodist church on Poyntz Avenue to Anderson Hall to attend classes.

"That was all pasture land then. I had to walk through that to get to school," he said.

The last event on Thursday will be the Yell Like Hell skit/cheer competition, also in Ahearn. This contest will be from 5:45 to 7:15 p.m. Contestants will be judged on originality, creativity, group enthusiasm and incorporation of the Homecoming theme, which is "Celebrate K-State! 125 years of ..." The five winning teams will perform their skits or cheers at 11:30 p.m. Friday in the Union.

The Spirit March will start at 9 p.m. Friday with the K-State Pep Band and marchers leading the way to Memorial Stadium. The bonfire and pep rally will continue until 9:30 p.m., with the Pant the Chant contest following.

Pre-judging of floats will be from 3 to 6 p.m. Friday. Floats will be judged on theme development, design and appearance. The judges also will rate enthusiasm and participation during the parade. Winners will be announced during halftime of the K-State/Louisiana Tech football game, scheduled to begin at 1:30 p.m. Saturday.

The parade route will start in the City Park and end at the intersection of Fourth Street and Poyntz Avenue, which is the reverse of the 1987 route. The parade will begin at 9 a.m. Saturday.

'Cat victories few in football outings

By Stuart Puls Collegian Reporter

Homecoming is a time of tradition on many college campuses. It generally means living group competitions, parades and football. When it comes to Homecoming, K-State is no different than any other university in the nation.

Living groups compete in everything from Yell like Hell to Body Building. A parade gives living groups a chance to show off floats and the community a chance to become involved. And, to cap off Homecoming week - a football game.

The ultimate Homecoming week for most universities is to win the game, but K-State does not have the average university Homecoming. It usually does not win the

In fact, the football team's record for the last 20 years is three wins, 16 losses, and

Here are some facts and trivia behind K-State's Homecoming record since 1968. ■ K-State has played Iowa State six times for Homecoming and the University of Missouri five times. ■ The Wildcat's worst loss was last year's 59-10 dumping by Oklahoma University.

■ The most points allowed by a Wildcat team is 61, against Missouri in a 61-21 loss in 1984.

■ The most points scored by a K-State team is 59 against Oklahoma in 1969. ■ The opponents have outscored K-

State teams 637-255. ■ The first K-State Homecoming was celebrated in 1915. Kansas State Agricultural College, what K-State was called then, lost to Kansas University. Opposing teams have averaged 31.8 points per game.

K-State has averaged 12.7 points per

K-State has not won a Homecoming game since 1981 when the 'Cats beat Iowa State 10-7.

■ The three teams the Wilcats have beaten in Homecoming games in the last 20 years are Oklahoma in 1969 with a 59-21 win, Oklahoma State in 1970 with a 28-15 win and Iowa State in 1981 with a

■ In the last 20 years, one Homecoming game has ended in a tie. It came in 1966 against KU. The final score was 3-3.

For the first time in more than 20 years, the Homecoming opponent will not be a Big Eight team. The Wildcats will entertain Louisiana Tech, a school in its first year of Division I football.

■ If K-State wins this Homecoming game, it will be the University's 300th win, or its 503th loss.

While the outcome of the 1988 Homecoming game is unsure, one thing is certain, it will be at least worth another page in the Wildcat record books.

Event poses questions

By Audra Dietz Staff Writer

Although the Homecoming Body Building competition is a crowd favorite, some of the stunts have been restricted this year due to the chances of injury to participants. Blue Key, sponsor of the event, is requiring participants to sign a release form freeing the organization and K-State of any liability if an injury occurs during the contest. This form, however, does not guarantee that either party will be kept out of court if an injured party sues for damages, said Dorothy Thompson, assistant University attorney. "All the release does is make the participants aware that they are taking an intentional risk," she said. "There is no absolute way of determining the effect of the release in court." The validity of the release depends on the circumstances of the accident, said Dianne Urban, students' attorney.

"The nature of the injury is a major factor," Urban said. "In a case involving a serious injury, it is possible to get around the

There have been suits in which the injured party was awarded damages even though a release form was signed, she said. The release form just gives Blue Key and K-State extra security, said Becky Svaty, competition coordinator and senior in secondary education.

Blue Key's official rule book states that pyramids cannot be more than two bodies high or about 12 feet from the floor.

Svaty said the risk of injury is greater in practice than the day of the contest, and the two-person rule was designed to protect the participants in practice as well as during the actual competition.

"People aren't as careful while they are practicing as they are in competition," she

However, Svaty said, the release form only covers the official competition. One two-person stunt, an "elevator," is considered illegal this year because of safety factors, she said. In the stunt, the bottom person's arms are extended straight above his or her head, with a second person standing on the palms of the first person's

Under the new rules, the only way this stunt can be performed is if the top person bends over and puts his or her hands on a third person's shoulders. This way, the base person is not supporting all the weight, Svaty said.

The preliminaries for Body Building are at 4 p.m. Thursday in Ahearn Field House, and the finals will be at 1 p.m. Friday in the Union Courtyard.

The event is worth 50 points to the winning group.

Ticket sales drop

By The Collegian Staff

After a week of float-making and cheerleading among living groups, the weekend's Homecoming game between K-State and Louisiana Tech should continue the parade of enthusiastic purple pride fans.

However, ticket sales for the game have dropped from last year's figure of 2,200 tickets sold to this year's 700, said Carol Adolph, athletic department ticket manager. About 6,800 students have purchased season tickets. KSU Stadium has 42,000

The 700 advanced reserved seats are sold at the ticket office or through the mail.

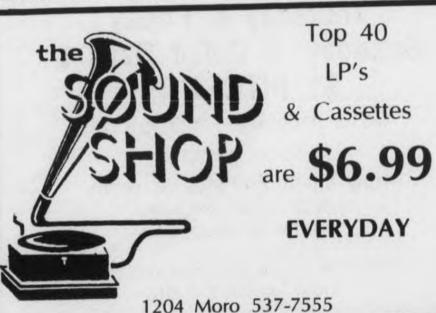

They do not include the tickets purchased by the visiting team.

"We are sorry to say we have not had an increase in ticket sales," Adolph said. "A lot of this is due to the team we are playing. Last year we played Oklahoma, and now this year we will play Louisiana Tech."

This is the first year in more than 20 that the Homecoming game has not pitted the Wildcats against a conference team.

Adolph said she expects ticket sales to pick up this week.

Although a lot of attention has been focused on the drop in Homecoming ticket sales, Adolph said the Homecoming game is not the biggest game of the season.

City residents to receive tax break

By Michael Nichols Government Editor

Due to an increase in property assessments, Manhattan residents will enjoy a substantial tax break in 1989, city officials said.

City Director of Finance Curt Wood said Manhattan's tax levy will decrease by about one-half of a mill from the previously estimated budget

"This is the first year I can remember that the reduction has been so high," Wood said. "Last year the tax levy was decreased by one-tenth, and this year it will go down almost half a

Wood said the budget set by Manhattan City Commission is arrived at through the estimated assessed evaluation released by Riley and Pottawatomie counties. The discrepancy between the estimated evaluation and the certified assessed evaluation is the main factor in reducing the mill levy, he said.

Wood said the assessed value of the Manhattan downtown area increased considerably with recent renovations and the construction of Manhattan Town Center.

"I certainly think the Manhattan Town Center played a very important part in making the personal property assessed evaluation go up about $1,100,000," he said.

Wood explained that assessed evaluation consists of three taxable properties:

 Real property, which includes land and improvements and makes up about two-thirds of the total assessed evaluation.

Personal property, which includes mobile homes, trailers, large trucks, manufacturing equipment and merchants' inventories.

State-assessed property, which includes public utilities.

City Manager Mike Conduff said he thinks the levy decrease will continue during the next few years.

K-State rates last with peers

By Paul Branson Staff Writer

A performance audit report released Monday ranked K-State last among its five peer institutions in the amount paid to faculty in annual salaries.

"The bottom line that faculty salaries in Kansas are not competitive thoughout the country was consistent with our findings," said Donald Hoyt, assistant provost for planning and evaluation services.

Hoyt said the report to the Legislative Post Audit Committee would be a great help to the Margin of Excellence program.

The report recommended increased attention to collecting good data about part-time faculty positions and graduate teaching assistants and the expenditures these positions require.

The report said that in 1987 K-State had 108 more faculty members than the peer group average for a school of its enrollment. The audit said this was a cause of the funding problems at the school.

"It is a common concern that Kansas has made available a large number of positions without funds for these positions,' Hoyt said.

Provost James Coffman said the student numbers the audit used did not reflect the increases in enrollment in 1987 and 1988. The University of Kansas, the only other university in Kansas included in the legislative study, ranked fourth in faculty salaries in its peer group.

The audit, which resulted in the report, was completed to determine the need for the Margin of Excellence program started this year. The program proposes to increase the quality of higher education in Kansas regents schools.

The audit studied the same institutions across the country that the Board of Regents uses when making funding comparisons. These institutions were determined similar to Kansas universities in such areas as population base, enrollment, percapita income within the state and curriculum.

Throckmorton funding anticipated

Phase II to broaden scope of ag research, teaching

By Susan L'Ecuyer Senior Staff Writer

The last major hurdle in obtaining funding for Phase II of Throckmorton was cleared Tuesday when a congressional conference committee approved $1.35 million for the project's initial planning and construction.

Part of the Department of Agriculture Appropriations Bill, the funding measure now awaits approval by houses of the U.S. Congress and the

"The action by the conference committee virtually assures initial funding for this project since both houses of Congress are expected to approve the appropriations bill," Kansas Sen. Nancy Kassebaum said. "This is a major step forward for the project and for advanced agricultural research at K-State."

Kassebaum said the agreement is important because it represents a federal commitment to begin matching state funding for the project.

"Without this federal funding, it would take many more years to build," she said. "Obviously, we will have to provide additional funding in the years ahead, but this should allow the project to get underway."

Construction of Throckmorton began in 1975, and Phase I was completed in August 1981. When completed, Phase II will provide offices, classrooms and state-of-the-art laboratories for agricultural research.

Lawrence Garvin, director of facilities planning, called the committee's action as "excellent" for K-State. He said the University was willing to accept as little as $125,000 in federal funding.

"A million three (figure) is certainly an indication of the commitment to agricultural research at K-State," he said. "It's likely to advance the state funding."

The total cost of Phase II of Throckmorton is an estimated $27 million, half of which will be funded by the federal government. The state is expected to provide matching

The Kansas Legislature has already approved $1.06 million for and research in one area will foster the project, including $60,000 in cooperation and exchange among planning money for fiscal year 1989, and $500,000 for each of the next two fiscal years for construction of new greenhouses, said Vince Cool of facilities planning.

Facilities initially built 66,000 square feet of greenhouses and now wants to add another 34,000 square feet, he said. When approved, part of the federal money will be used to complete the greenhouses to better facilitate research projects such as the ongoing study of new wheat varieties. Phase II will mean an additional 96,000 square feet will be added to the current 178,000-square-foot structure of Phase I.

The long-range plan for Throckmorton calls for additions to both sides of the current structure, but the first expansion will be to the west, Cool said.

George Ham, head of the agronomy department, said the completion of Phase II would be a "tremendous increase in facilities."

We've been very short on facilities," Ham said. "Lack of space has' been a major problem in completing our research and teaching duties efficiently."

Being able to concentrate faculty faculty - not only in agronomy, but among the different departments as well, he said.

The decision to approve the funding was based on the findings of a 1987 survey that said the research center at K-State was of regional and national importance, said Ken Murphy, press secretary for Kansas Rep. Jim Slattery. He said the survey recommended the project be completed as soon as possible.

"Slattery is confident (the funding) will be approved," he said. "It's just a matter of dotting the i's and crossing the t's."

"I'm very pleased that we have been able to secure funding for this facility," Kassebaum said. "Kansas State University has long been a leader in agricultural research. I believe it is essential not only to preserve that tradition but to build on it."

"Kansas State University is a world-class center for agricultural research, and this project will help keep it that way," said Kansas Sen. Bob Dole, a co-sponsor with Kassebaum of the Senate version of the bill that was accepted by the conference committee.

Senate committee to allocate funds

By Kendra Gensemer Collegian Reporter

Student Senate Thursday unanimously approved Student Body President Troy Lubbers' appointments to the Educational Opportunity Fund committee, which will decide how to allocate $250,000 to student organizations.

Sharon Patnode, junior in political science; Derick Walker, sophomore in apparel and textiles marketing; Doug Folk, senior in electrical engineering and student senate chairman; and Becky Griebat, senior in math education and chief of staff, are the committee members who will hear funding requests from campus organizations. Lubbers, Pat Bosco, associate vice president for institutional advancement and dean of student life and Larry Viterna, director of financial aid, are also part of the

The money for the fund comes from an increase in tuition and an increase in the number of students enrolling. Tuition increased six percent, one percent - $250,000 of which was earmarked for student funds.

The Kansas Board of Regents established the fund and guidelines for the committee in May.

The only stipulations for the committee are that it should be made up of "four students representing diverse campus constituencies, selected in a manner determined by the Student Governing Association," as stated in Senate Resolution 88/27.

"I tried to pick people who would represent any sort of aspect at all that might come before the committee," Lubbers said.

"On this committee, I have a married student, a non-traditional student with a young boy, a minority student who has worked in Financial Aid for over a year and an off-campus student representing the Greek area," he said.

The committee will function just like the finance committee, he said. It will hear proposals from groups, evaluate and determine

Soviet troops delay withdrawal

UNITED NATIONS - Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze said Tuesday that the pullout of more than 100,000 Red Army troops from Afghanistan has been suspended because of alleged violations of a U.N.-negotiated accord.

In a speech earlier Tuesday to the 43rd General Assembly, Shevardnadze proposed that the five permanent members of the Security Council meet to discuss violations of the withdrawal agreement. "As soon as Soviet troops began to withdraw, a non-stop production line of violations was set in motion," he said. Shevardnadze later told reporters the Soviets have suspended their pullout.

"We have completed the first stage of our withdrawal," he said, speaking through a translator in a U.N. building hallway. We have not yet begun the second stage of withdrawal.

Let's wait and see, and I raised several question in my speech today. It is necessary to stop the violations that take place. It is the most important thing," he said.

The Soviet Union has filed numerous complaints to the United Nations alleging that Pakistan is allowing U.S.-backed guerrillas to continue launching raids into Afghanistan from bases in Pakistan.

"This cannot be allowed to happen. The chain of conflict settlement generated by Afghanistan must not be allowed to break," Shevardnadze said.

Committee approves welfare bill

WASHINGTON - House and Senate negotiators overwhelmingly approved a historic, work-oriented welfare bill Tuesday despite bitter objections by several House members who labeled it punitive and fraudulent.

The conference committee adopted its landmark compromise 35-8 after conservatives and moderates had heaped heavy praise on the plan, designed to foster independence and parental responsibility among welfare recipients.

"A chance like this doesn't come along very often," said Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, D-III., chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee. He said the $3.34 billion plan "demands that welfare recipients help themselves, but it also provides the training and work-related assistance that is needed for economic independence."

Indictments avoid issues

MIAMI — Two long-awaited indictments accusing a private network of illegally supplying mercenaries and arms to the Contras steered clear of thorny questions about the group's links to the Reagan administration or drug trafficking.

The indictments also left other questions unanswered. Thirteen men are accused of having violated the U.S. Neutrality Act by mounting an illegal campaign to help the Contras overthrow the Sandinista government of Nicaragua.

The defendants include the brother of a top Contra leader, the head of the group called Civilian Materiel Assistance, and at least two men reputed to have drug ties. The latest development in the case is the government's response, filed Sept. 16, to defense contentions that the Neutrality Act does not apply because the United States was effectively at war with Nicaragua. But the U.S. attorney's office avoided confronting that issue directly in its response, saying the matter should be decided in trial, not during a special hearing requested by the defendants.

Other unresolved issues include possible Reagan administration oversight of the illegal activities, the question of drug ties to the operation, the absence of key figures among those indicted and the sluggish pace of the investigation.

Poll taken on admissions policy

TOPEKA - The state's business community is almost evenly divided over the idea of changing the state's longstanding policy of open admissions to its universities, according to a recent poll conducted for the Kansas Chamber of Commerce and

The poll said 51 percent of the state chamber members who responded think the state should restrict admissions to its universities, while 48 percent oppose such a change. The results were similar when members were asked whether all state universities should have the same admissions standards.

Also, the members who responded gave the regents system a B-minus grade in evaluating how well state universities prepare students for the working world.

In announcing the results of its poll Monday, the KCCI said the survey indicated no clear consensus among its members on the admissions issue. In all, 397 members answered a questionnaire on the subject earlier this month.

Last year, the State Board of Regents forwarded a selective admissions plan to the 1988 Legislature, where it failed to pass. Generally, the regents plan would have required high school students to have passed a "college preparatory" curriculum or to score 23 or better on the ACT to get into a regents institution.

Each institution could make exceptions to the policy for a number of students equal to 10 percent of the entering freshman Of the KCCI members polled, 52 percent said the six regents universities should have the same standards for admission. How-

KANSAS CITY, Kan. - "The Last Temptation of Christ," a movie that has sparked protests nationwide, will make its first showing in the Kansas City area on Friday.

The film, spurned by major area movie chains, will be shown at the Granada Theatre.

Bob Maes, president of the Granada Theatre Historical Society, said Monday the society "felt it was time to take a stand and not let people tell us what we should and should not Maes said the theater had been swamped with phone calls, with about 30 percent of callers in favor of showing the film and 70 percent against. He said a few ministers had approved of showing the movie.

"The Last Temptation of Christ," directed by Martin Scorsese, is based on a 1955 novel by Nikos Kazantzakis.

Students want dance ban lifted

PURDY, Mo. - Students at Purdy High School have asked their principal to allow a dance, testing a federal order striking down the school's dance ban.

Students presented a written request for a Dec. 10 homecoming dance to Purdy High School principal Ron Richardson Monday afternoon, said Joan Fox. Fox's daughter, Nancy, is student body president at the high school.

Richardson and Purdy Schools superintendent Sheldon Buxton both were out of town Tuesday and unavailable for comment. But Buxton has said the dance request would "be handled in a routine manner, the same as we would any activity."

U.S. District Judge Russell Clark, after hearing four days of testimony in a suit filed by Fox and other Purdy parents and students, ruled in August that the district's dance ban was unconstitutional. Clark said the ban promoted the values of those who believe dancing is sinful.

Ambassador voting to begin

Voting on K-State Ambassadors for 1988-89 will be from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. today through Friday in the Union. Students will be able to vote for one male and one female candidate.

All students will be required to show a K-State ID in order to cast their ballots for ambassadors.

This is an all-University vote. The candidates are grouped according to gender, not by department or college affiliation. This year there are four women candidates because the ambassador selection committee was unable to narrow the decision to three as it usually does, said Jeff Wing, senior in political science and a member of the ambassador selection committee. All the candidates were equally qualified, he said. The ambassadors serve as hosts at alumni functions and campus events such as Landon Lectures, visits by the Board of Regents and McCain events. They also travel to high schools to represent K-State on career counseling nights.

Udall lauds Hispanic history, spirit

By Amy Lyons Collegian Reporter

Stewart Udall, 37th Secretary of the Interior, used a variety of devices to hold the audience's attention Tuesday night during the second Convocation lecture of the year.

Udall used slides of the American Southwest, poems reflecting the attitudes of Spanish explorers, and a plea for recognition of Hispanic cultual influences to retain the concentration of the crowd of about 1,000 in McCain Auditorium.

Speaking on his chosen topic, "Coronado and the North American Grassland," Udall retraced the steps the Spanish explorer took during his 16th century venture through the American Southwest through the use of colorful slides.

The photographs, taken from his 1987 book "To the Inland Empire: Coronado and the Spanish Legacy," accompanied his message that Hispanic culture in the United States has been ignored.

"We have a rich lode of history, should mine it," he said.

The gray-haired former Cabinet member preceded his remarks with his observations concerning the Konza Prairie Research Natural Area, which he toured Tuesday.

"The fauna, the flora, the landscape and the whole history of this and maybe it's about time that we part of the country is fascinating to the route of Coronado. me," he said. "It is also something very distinctive, and it just seems to me that such an idea should continue.

Stewart Udall took a few hours Tuesday morning to do what he said he enjoys most: experience the land. The former Secretary of the Inter-

Udall said things have changed since he served under Presidents John Kennedy and Lyndon Johnson. The public is more aware of environmental issues, he said.

"The extraordinary thing that I see when I look back over the last 25 years ... is the way ecology and environmental thinking has become global," he said.

Udall said: "Scientifically we understand a lot of things that we didn't." But he criticized President Reagan's environmental record. He also expressed the hope that the next administration would concentrate on areas such as land acquisition and endangered species programs.

"We have some talk going that maybe a way to begin to do justice and fairness to the Hispanic part of our history is to have a Coronado trail," Udall said. "Perhaps then we can right some of the wrongs."

Udall shared chosen poems that "reflect the spirit" of the Spanish explorers who "aren't in the history

"That was my favorite part of the program," said Nancy Twiss, instructor of arts and sciences, of the poetry. "He really read it with passion."

"I was very glad to see the interrelationship between the Hispanics and Americans brought out tonight. We need to correct our historical views and realize that it didn't all just start in the East with the Pilgrims," she said.

Udall served as Secretary of the Interior for from 1961 to 1969 in both John Kennedy and Lyndon Johnson's Cabinets. Udall now writes and practices environmental law in Phoe-

University official collapses at Union

By The Collegian Staff

Veryl A. Switzer, associate athletic director and assistant vice president for institutional advancement, collapsed late Tuesday afternoon during a meeting in Union 202 of an apparent heart attack.

Switzer was taken by ambulance to The St. Mary Hospital and later transferred to Topeka. Officials at the Manhattan hospital said Switzer, 56, suffered a possible heart attack.

Switzer was transferred to the Coronary Care Unit at the St. Francis Hospital and Medical Center in Topeka for further tests and is listed in critical condition.

Switzer's wife said her husband had no history of heart problems and had never complained of any pains that could be associated with a heart condition.

The meeting Switzer was attending - CORE Program for Athletes - was a regular academic meeting with the student academic center, various athletic support units, and Michael Lynch, vice president for education and student services. The purpose of the meeting was to review programs designed to assist young athletes, said Mike Fisher, director of academic services for athletes.

"He was taking notes when he held up his pen and said, 'I'm having problems, I'm having problems,' in a low-keyed normal tone of voice, then he just fell back. That's when Mike (Fisher) jumped in," said a witness at the meeting.

Fisher said he eased Switzer to the floor, where he turned him on his side, cleared his breathing passage and administered CPR.

Freshmen, university benefit from orientation

ic speaking. The course required a speech on a campus issue. One of my classmates gave an informative and illuminating speech on the parking problem on campus.

After the speech, the instructor commented that if students realized how many parking spaces are reserved for students compared to ones reserved for faculty members, they would "go mad." Perhaps this is an exaggeration, but one thing is clear: if students become more involved in, and aware of campus instead of just complaining about it, we could have a better campus.

Every semester, freshmen start university education. For almost all of them, this is their first exposure to a university-style education and they are, in a sense, startled in the new environment. It takes a while for the incoming students to adjust to the new place and to the new expectations of university education.

There is a considerable lag between the time the student enters the university and the time the student becomes fully aware of the facilities, opportunities and problems on a ast semester I took a course in publ- campus and learns to respond to each one. For example, how many freshmen and even sophomores are likely to call up their student senators and express their resentment over inadequate lighting on campus? I guess not

> To sum up, it is just like saying that by the time students learn the rules, the game is over or in the last stage. Every batch of freshmen goes through the same cycle.

> To enhance involvement of students in campus activities, which I believe is a significant part of a university education, the university should provide smooth and abrupt transition to a complete university life.

One of the ways to accomplish this is to offer a program or — more precisely — a half-semester, credit/no credit course titled, "Introduction to University Education." This idea might sound ridiculous to some of the juniors and seniors. However, I would suggest these critics think how much more they could have gotten out of their college education if they had known some things during their first year at college that they know now.

Such a program will serve a dual purpose.

Commentary

SHEIKH FAISAL RAZZAQ

Collegian Columnist

irst, it will inform the incoming students - freshmen and transfer students - about the university itself, facilities available on campus and about some of the campus organizations - especially about the student government and how it can successfully represent the interests of students. Freshmen will then be expected to benefit further from computing services, library facilities, union services and health facilities without having to wait until they discover them. That way, the students do not have to wait until they take a course in public speaking to realize the full potential of the library, and will not have to get ill to realize the number of health counseling services provided by Lafene Student Health Center.

Second, such a program would familiarize the freshmen with special study skills needed and teaching techniques used by the teaching faculty in a university environment.

A large number of course examinations are conducted in a multiple choice format. I bet you realize there is a difference between knowing the material and correctly sorting out that material on a multiple choice exam with a number of "none of the above" choices. This means, in addition to knowing the material, you must learn some test-taking strategies. Most of the time, students have to learn these strategies the hard way.

A program, like the one I am suggesting, can explicitly give some useful tips to new students. Note-taking, time management and information about tutoring services are some other things that can be incorporated in the would compare U-LearN with a book lying on a shelf in the top stack level of the library. Until you reach for it, you will not get it. I am not trying to down-play the role of services provided by U-LearN. I am simply suggesting that the University ought to reach out and give some of the essential information I mentioned above to all students, whether they realize they need it or not. Such a program, of course, would not replace U-LearN. In fact, it would complement it and introduce incoming students to the services provided by U-LearN.

After freshmen and transfer students go through such a simple and inherently beneficial program, they can be expected to be more conscious of their surroundings and more confident in pursuing their studies. Although my brief search of any comparable programs offered at any of the East and West coast universities was futile, I still believe sooner or later some university will realize the need for such a program.

Why can't that university be K-State?

Reagan administration trades ethics for unrest

Last week, House of Representatives Speaker Jim Wright, D-Texas, revealed that the Reagan administration had recently used the CIA to add to the already great amount of civil unrest

The administration pulled off the perfect playground coup, it

Oddly enough, White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater made no effort to deny Wright's charge. Nor did he try to justify it. Instead, he devoted his time to accusing Wright of playing "a little loose" with U.S. intelligence and being "more willing to take the positions of the Ortega government."

Fitzwater's claim is ludicrous. Can anyone blame Ortega for being upset when a protest against his government is organized by the U.S. government, not Nicaraguan citizens? He may have been wrong to react the way he did, but the initial blame must lie with the Reagan administration. Without administration

Editor,

Picture this ... It is an average Monday afternoon, the weather is somewhat chillier than usual, you've managed to make it through all your lectures with notes that might even be useful to you, and now you have this strange desire to read the textbook for a class that you just had an exam in so you can keep caught up. (Someone once said the best thing about just taking an exam is that no matter what, you are caught up.)

But where shall you go to read? You're tired of sitting in hard-wood desks. You need somewhere that is cool, comfortable, and away from distractions. How about going back to your apartment? No, I have so many little errands to do that I'm sure I will get distracted. How about the library? Well, they do have those chairs on third floor that can sometimes be comfortable, but it is usually too warm for me. I know, what about the 'Cats Pause at the Union, you always get a lot done there. Well, at least you used to ...

Unfortunately, I don't know what the deal is, but the Union's 'Cats Pause has really taken a turn for the worse this year. I've always enjoyed the quiet comfortable atmosphere that surrounds the student who wants to get a little reading done. However, it seems that no one is reading the clearly posted sign that states: "Please note that the 'Cats Pause lounge is an area intended for individual studying and relaxation. Persons with food or drink, and small group meetings are asked to use other appropriate Union facilities." In translation, "This room is for people who want to study. Please don't visit with your neighbor, because you could be bugging the hell out of someone else ... Don't get me wrong, I realize we aren't in the sixth grade with the "No Talking Rule" in effect. Sometimes we just need to talk to our neighbor. In fact, I don't care what anybody is talking about as long as they aren't bugging

Quiet in 'Cats Pause really used by people like me who want to avoid as many distractions as possible when studying or just reading the Collegian. I get really discouraged when people are talking away when there are seats available just outside the door of the 'Cats Pause that are designed for that use.

> I took the liberty to ask the Union Governing Board what the purpose of the 'Cats Pause was. The lady who answered my question said that the room was structured to block out as much outside noise as possible to provide a quiet, comfortable atmosphere for those who wanted to study in such an environment. If that is what it is designed for, then why don't we use it that way?

Change strategy

Editor,

I read with interest the editorial in the Sept. 19 paper regarding the benefits of the football program. It made several valid points in a clear and concise manner. Although, it was sad that one of the most compelling arguments for retaining the football program was that it gives the marching band a place to play on Saturday afternoons.

Despite that, it was a much more persuasive argument for supporting the football program than the brow beating inflicted upon your readers last week by Messrs. Svoboda and Wilhelm. I was amused that there was no reference to whatever criticisms prompted such a vigorous defense of the program. But just when I thought that there would be an intelligent discussion of the program, I read Tom Perrin's column in the Wednesday paper where he threw more barbs at the student body for its lack of support of the program.

The reason why people spend the time and money to attend football games is for enjoyment. To me it is heartbreaking to see the majority of the players play their hearts out only to be handcuffed by the mental mistakes me or anyone else. It's just that the room is of a few players and an inflexible offensive game plan that does not compensate for a short field near the goal line and the defensive adjustments of the Iowa coaching staff.

If K-State can ever field a team that is fundamentally sound at all positions and can come up with innovative, dynamic game plans, then the fans will be back.

People still talk about the Oklahoma game a few years ago when K-State jumped out to a 20-point lead at the half on the strength of Jim Dickey's off-the-wall game plan that included an onside kick for the opening kickoff. The team was run over in the second half by Oklahoma's superior size, but it was enjoyable and an awful lot of fun while it lasted.

K-State football fans don't expect much, but when the team gives games away - it is just too painful to watch. The three things that will bring the fans back are: heady, fundamentally sound play; intelligent, wellconceived game plans and the graduation of well-educated players who can apply the lessons learned both in the classroom and on the field toward a satisfying life.

There is a fourth thing that could be done to boost student attendance. That would be for the athletic program to stop trying to be a big business and either reduce or eliminate student ticket costs. Maybe then it would become a game for the kids - like it was meant to be - rather than for the alumni and the staff of the athletic department. I suspect that the strident tone of many of your articles are more because people are sweating their jobs rather than any concern for the psychological well-being of the players, as Perrin suggests in his article.

Students and other K-State football fans are sending a message, but nobody is listening. Your publication could act for what the real problems are with the football program, and that could lead to positive change. The harangues you have been printing are just leaving a bitter taste in your readers' mouths.

Coliseum officials target many audiences

More than 700 fans stood in line Saturday morning outside Bramlage Coliseum, anxiously awaiting prize seating for the Def Leppard concert scheduled for Oct. 20.

Saturday as it debuts with the Beach Boys concert. Both events mark the beginning of big-name entertainment in Manhattan.

"The turnout for (Def Leppard) ticket sales was a great surprise," said Charles Thomas, coliseum director, adding that the box office was too small with only four windows to service the crowd.

"I waited for eight hours, and I wasn't close to the last one in line," said Julie Ball, sophomore in animal sciences and industry. The crowd became concerned with ticket availability and location in relation to the coliseum floor. Rumors of ticket shortages spread. Ball said she heard that people were unhappy with the seating, but she couldn't understand their concern.

"My ticket is in row 30 and I am happy. There isn't a bad seat in Bramlage. No one will have a blocked view because of the way the seating is arranged," she said.

The coliseum is designed to allow proper viewing from any angle, Thomas said. He opened the concourse during Saturday's ticket sales to let the students judge for "Most students saw the seating, went right around the corner and bought their tickets without hesitation," he said.

Thomas stood on the subroof to explain to the crowd that the ticket supply was sufficient. If needed, tickets could be pulled from the Lawrence and Topeka outlets, he said.

On Saturday, 6,500 to 7,000 tickets were sold at the coliseum ticket office, the main outlet. A total of about 8,000 tickets were sold at all outlets Saturday, Thomas said.

Although K-State contracted Def Leppard through the band's promoter, Contemporary Productions, Thomas purchased the Beach Boys' performance through the coliseum's operating budget finances.

"We are taking a big risk on (the Beach Boys). We are trying to keep the ticket price down so it is affordable for students to take a date," Thomas said, adding that 5,500 to 6,000 ticket sales would be needed to break

The opening show is not necessarily geared to make money, but to introduce the coliseum, he said.

"Because there is no track record, it will be A different scene awaits the coliseum interesting to see how the first attempt will turn out," Thomas said.

As revenue is generated from the concerts, Thomas plans to establish a fund specifically designed to finance upcoming shows and replacement equipment for the coliseum.

K-State is one of several universities that schedule concerts in their sports centers. Bramlage is similar in size to the Bob Devaney Center at the University of Nebraska. However, Nebraska's scheduling policy differs from K-State's. Nebraska's University Programming Council co-sponsors concerts and entertainment, whereas Thomas schedules all of the performances for K-State.

Thomas will continue to schedule concerts during basketball season, while working out conflicts with practices. However, Nebraska's policy prohibits the scheduling of conprogramming coordinator of campus activities and programs.

Everything depends on the shows involved. "We have scheduled the Harlem Globetrotters to perform after the first of the year and the Shrine Circus in April. We are still talking to Sesame Street."

Unlike the family shows, most musical touring groups don't schedule more than two Promoters continually call for available dates, Thomas said. When promoters are "I would like to schedule a show about interested in a location, they request a two- or three-day time span. Then the coliseum director and promoter finalize the date, payment plan and details.

"(K-State) must be very flexible and make every effort to accomodate the artist and promoter's requests because (it is) not a main stage such as Kansas City or Denver," Thomas said, adding that K-State must be part of the touring route to be considered for a show.

Dochtermann said Bramlage was chosen for the Def Leppard concert because it is a new facility. Also, Bramlage has adequate seating for a big show and is in a college circuit. As part of the band's touring route, Manhattan provided easy entry and exit.

The artists weigh the aspects and determine where they can make money, he said. At Bramlage, they expect to make a profit.

Profits for the artists are not secured, but the coliseum is guaranteed a certain amount. Rent for the coliseum is either $1,500 or 12 percent of the gross ticket sales, whichever is greater, Thomas said.

The Expocentre in Topeka and the University of Nebraska have similar policies promoters purchase their facilities.

"Usually, $1,500 or 12 percent of the ticket gross is the standard rate," said Steven Rosenblatt, executive manager of the Expocentre. Thomas said: "Additional costs include catering, a limo or van, and special furniture for the band. We haven't had any strange requests like removing all the red M&M's from the containers, which Van Halen had requested in the past." In contrast to profits and expenses of the coliseum, profits for the artists are not

For many high school students, the K-State ambassador provides their first glimpse of Kansas State University. Therefore, it is essential that the ambassador understands our school, its students and its traditions. He or she should be able to share this knowledge with alumni and prospective students and their parents.

The most important duty an ambassador has is bridging the gap between our University and these people. I am confident that I could execute all of these tasks. I have a good understanding of just how the University functions, and I am excited about sharing my insights. K-State has become our home away from home. Just as many of us are proud of our hometowns, we are equally proud of K-State and its accomplishments. I want to be a Kansas State ambassador so that others can experience the great things that we as students are experiencing now.

"Yes, we would do it again," said Mark Lacy and Janelle Larson, outgoing K-State Ambassadors for 1988.

"The job of ambassador took a fair amount of extra time, but I think that the rewards were well worth my effort," said Larson, a Hiawatha native and senior in animal sciences and industry and interdisciplinary social science.

Larson said she especially enjoyed meeting students from Kansas high schools and answering their questions about life at K-

"The hardest part of the job was always having to have to act positive even if I had an off day," Larson said.

Mark Lacy, a Kansas City native and senior in accounting, said the job of ambassador was a lot of fun. He said he believes he was chosen to be a candidate because he is a "typical" K-State

"The only disadvantage I could see is that sometimes we got called on short notice to host an event, but that is a minor thing when it is weighed against the fun and experience we have gained as ambassadors," he said.

K-State ambassador candidates are screened through interviews by a panel of student government representatives, faculty members, alumni and past ambassadors. Three women and three men are usually chosen, but this year there will be four women candidates.

The candidates are then voted on by the entire student body.

"Mark and Janelle have represented K-State extremely well." said Becky Klingler, director of Alumni Clubs and adviser to the K-State Ambassadors.

Votes for the 1989 K-State Ambassadors can be cast from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. today through Friday in the Union.

We should thank our strong alumni for the contributions they've made, not just financially, but also for their support in encouraging prospective students to look at what K-State has to offer. Prospective students are vitally important, and they will make the difference in the future.

The ambassadors also have an opportunity to make a positive difference. They share with the alumni and prospective students their "purple pride" for the University, and convey a sense of our friendliness, spirit, and outstanding learning atmosphere that makes such a difference to those of us who are currently a part of the University community.

If there ever was an exciting era in the history of Kansas State University, this year is it! With enrollment now well over 19,000, the official opening of a spectacular new coliseum only days away and recordbreaking alumni donations being recorded, K-State is making news

But what is the reason behind all these developments?

People at K-State CARE! How would any of these accomplishments ever be achieved if it weren't for the energy, cooperation and spirit that K-Staters have?

With this combination of qualities, the people at K-State keep making me more proud. It's for this reason that I would consider serving as one of K-State's ambassadors a once in a lifetime experience.

Having served for over a year as a campus tour guide, I have had the opportunity to introduce hundreds of potential students, parents and visitors to K-State. Each time I talk to someone about K-State, I find that there is always so much more to tell! As an ambassador, I would continue to convey not only K-State's rich tradition, but its exciting future as well, to potential students, alumni and friends of the University.

Kansas State University - "the best kept secret in Kansas." This is a familiar phrase that I have heard from those who are here at this quality University.

K-State — a quality education, a warm and friendly atmosphere, topnotch students, excellent faculty, concerned administrators, a beautiful campus and a supportive community. This is the secret that so many know, yet so many have to discover.

I am sure most of you would agree, "secrets are meant to be told." If no other secret is meant to be told, this one certainly is.

The K-State ambassadors are the students' media in spreading this secret and are charged with sharing K-State with prospective students.

When I think of the word "ambassador," I immediately think of someone working with many people, each with a different personality. My main motivation in running for ambassador is to have the opportunity to meet people and share with them my love for K-State, instilling in them a desire to see and attend K-State.

I sincerely enjoy talking with individuals and discovering their interests, goals and character. I'm also open-minded. If I don't totally agree with someone's thinking, I still listen, because by listening to their philosophy or ideas, I might be able to expand my own thinking.

SGA crowns 'president for a day'

By Nancy Prosser Collegian Reporter

Student Government Association Tuesday sponsored its "student body president for a day" program. The winner of the honor, Ann Ridge, was crowned temporary president of K-State's student body at 1:30 p.m. by Student Body President Troy Lubbers.

Lubbers said the purpose of the program is to give the average student a chance to see how student government works from first-hand experience.

"It gives a student who is unfamiliar with student government a glimpse of what student government at K-State has to offer," Lubbers

SGA sponsors the president for a day program once each semester. The fall winner is chosen in a drawing from people who sign up at the SGA booth at the Activities Carnival in the Union at the beginning of the semester.

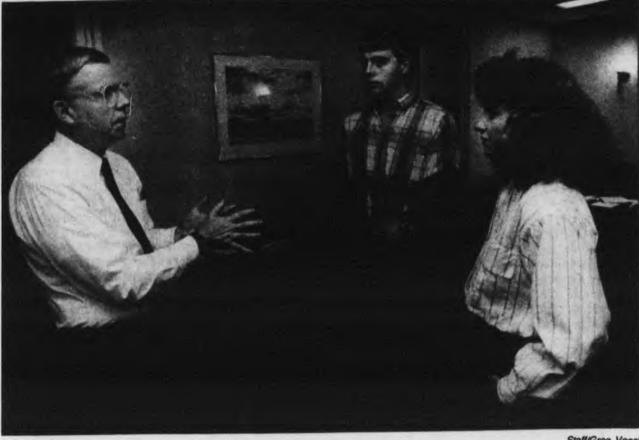

Caroline Cawley, senior in advertising, was the student body president for a day in the fall of 1987. Cawley said the opportunity came as a complete surprise to her, and gave her a chance to get a look at the workings of student government.

"Being student body president for a day encouraged me to become more involved in student government. The next election I ran for senator in the arts and sciences college and won," she said.

Ridge, a freshman in pre-law, said she also had no intention of winning the drawing when she signed up.

"I never win prizes, so I had the attitude of I'll never win anyway, and was very surprised when Troy called to tell me I had won," she said.

Honorary to conduct mock election today

By Stacy Sweazy Collegian Reporter

Students living in the residence hall system will receive a chance to predict the winner of the U.S. presidential election.

K-State's National Residence Hall Honorary is conducting a mock election from 4 to 6:30 p.m. today in Derby, Kramer and Boyd food centers.

"We wanted to come up with a way to better educate students about the election process and encourage them to vote," said Dave Haden, staff assistant in the Department of Housing and coadviser of the honorary.

Members of the group also hope to educate students about the candidates and some of their platforms, he said.

"We thought a good way to do this would be to hold a straw poll," Haden said.

The idea of the straw poll is to encourage students to think about the presidential candidates and to familiarize students with voter registration and absentee ballot processes, he said.

"I am interested in helping students get registered to vote, and hopefully go to the polls to vote in the future," said Wanda Coder, Riley County clerk.

"I hope the outcome doesn't persuade voters," said Norbert Marek, junior in history and treasurer of the honorary. "We're trying to get an opinion, but the most important thing is to offer more information."

Representatives from the Young Democrats and the Riley County Republican Headquarters will be available to answer students' questions and address their concerns.

"I think it will increase student awareness about what the candidates have to offer," said Todd Martin, senior in microbiology.

"I think it's a tremendous idea and students will be buzzing about it, especially after the results," said Rosanne Proite, assistant director of housing.

The election will provide students the opportunity to do some informal debating among themselves, Proite said.

Secretary of State Bill Graves provided registration postcards for residents to fill out and send to their county clerk by Oct. 18. An application to register will be mailed to them and after completion they will be eligible to vote in the 1988 election.

"I hope they see it as an opportunity to register their opinion, but also register to vote," Marek said.

Minority funding increased

By Laurie Cox Collegian Reporter

Through an expanded recruitment program, scholarship funding for minorities has been increased to keep pace with the increasing student enrollment.

"This new plan includes a recruitment program that is actionoriented, pro-active, resourceful, innovative, financially sound, service-oriented and focused," said Hakim Salahu-Din, assistant director of admissions.

K-State's first minority student, George Washington Owen, graduated in 1899. Since that time, Salahu-Din said, there has been "more of a universal effort to attract people of color," as well as achieve equity for the students.

Most of the funding for the new program is being channeled into scholarships, Salahu-Din said. It will guarantee scholarships to semifinalists in the National Achievement Program for Outstanding Negro Students and the National Hispanic Scholar Awards Program, he said.

"We would like to encourage minority students to put in applications, either with (the Office of Student Financial Assistance) or the office of minority affairs, so that our people can help them receive the scholarships," said Larry Moeder, associate director of student financial assistance.

The program has also received "a commitment from every undergraduate college to increase funding for minority scholarships," Salahu-Din said. "We hope to meet the aspiring students where they are, and show them how they can achieve better by

Increased enrollment creates Manhattan housing concerns

By The Associated Press

MANHATTAN - A task force formed by the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce is set to begin a housing search for the growing enrollment at K-State.

The task force will look at immediate solutions for a possible enrollment increase for next year, said Rick Mann, a banker and chairman of the task force. The recently formed task force is expected to hold its first meeting Thursday.

"If we continue to grow as the administration is hoping we will, we're going to be needing space for an additional 500 to 600 students next fall," he said.

The task force will look at possible sites in the community and on the campus.

The opinions of local private developers also will be gathered by the task force at a public hearing, Mann said. Mann and Bill Boyd, president of the Chamber, both said the task force will consider the possibility that enrollment could stabilize or decline.

"We want to proceed with optimism, but we also have to proceed with caution," Boyd said. "What if (enrollment) falls off next year? What if the administration doesn't continue its aggressive posture?

"If you go out and increase the housing stock and the University doesn't grow, it could have an adverse economic impact on the community - on not only the real estate folks, but the financial institutions," he said.

Boyd said the University must have the approval of the Kansas Board of Regents to continue its aggressive recruitment program and the board will want assurance that Manhattan can handle the influx of students.

"We're at capacity right now on housing," Boyd said. "But they have the problem that there are a number of students who consider themselves to be inadequately housed (now).

"We've got to have happy students, and that means new housing units," he said.

K-State golf team hits record round at Texas tourney

By The Collegian Staff

The K-State men's golf team shot a school record of 288 Monday to move into sixth place at the second annual Texas Intercollegiate Tournament at Woodhaven Country Club in Fort Worth.

The Wildcats were ninth in the 15-team field after shooting an opening-round score of 302, but vaulted up three places after Monday's round.

K-State has two players in the chase for tournament medalist honors. Jeff Sedorcek, who took medalist honors last week at the Kansas State Invitational, is tied for the lead at 141 with Bill Steen of Abilene Christian. Bret Vuillemin of K-State is one stroke back at 142. Sedorcek had rounds of 72 and 69 on the par-71 course, while Vuillemin has turned in scores of 75 and 67.

"A positive attitude is so important, and right now they just believe in themselves," coach Russ Bunker said. "They had a great, great practice round, and I was a little concerned that they might not carry it over, but they sucked it up and have done a great job. I'm excited for them.

"Brett and Jeff had a couple putts that didn't go down yesterday or they might have been around 65 or 66."

Texas Wesleyan leads the event with a 576, followed by Nebraska at 578, Southwest Louisiana State at 580, Troy State at 587, Abilene Christian at 588 and K-State at 590.

"Some of the schools ahead of us are small, but they can really play," Bunker said. "They're on the course all year. For K-State to be four over is great. It's certainly a step in the right direction for us.'

Other K-State two-day totals include Brad Stephans at 153 and John Shields at 155. Daran Neuschafer, who had carded a 77 on the first day, pulled out of the second round because of illness.

The final round of the event was scheduled for Tuesday.

Volleyball squad swept at Wichita

By Mike May Sports Writer

After opening the season with a school record eight consecutive wins, K-State's volleyball squad dropped its fourth straight match Tuesday night in Wichita.

Wichita State University avenged average of 3.5 aces per game. an earlier defeat to the Wildcats by sweeping K-State, 16-14, 15-11, 15-12.

Nelson praised the leadership of his State found itself fighting an uphill upperclassmen. But following Tues- battle. day's loss, the ninth-year coach has changed his tune. "We are not getting the leadership I think we need. Leadership is coming from the younger players. That's fine, but in addition this team needs leadership from the older players leadership that we are not getting right now," Nelson said.

In the University of Nebraska Invitational Friday and Saturday at Lincoln, Nelson said the Wildcats lost their three matches there because they got away from their game plan. Apparently, the 'Cats didn't learn from their mistakes. "We did the same things we did this weekend," Nelson said. "We then give up two quick points."

One problem K-State had in Nebraska was the inability to use its nationally ranked serving attack to produce aces. That problem again showed up as K-State served only five aces in the three games against WSU - well below the Wildcats'

Another difficulty the Wildcats had in Lincoln was getting and then maintaining a lead. That problem Earlier this season, coach Scott was evident again Tuesday as K-

> After dropping the opening game, the 'Cats fell behind the Shockers 11-0 in the second game.

> "Mentally we just lost ourselves," Nelson said. "We were not able to play to our strengths with any consistency."

K-State was out-dug 68-50 in the match. That, coupled with the Shockers' .346 match hitting percentage, provided a season-split in the series. Earlier this season, the 'Cats defeated Wichita State in five games in Manhattan.

Wichita State is now 11-7, which is five more victories than the Shockers posted all of last year. K-State would fight hard to get a point, and dropped to 8-4.

Pickett accounted for more than half of K-State's offense in the game against the Green Wave. He rushed 16 times for 113 yards and caught seven passes for 134 yards.

Pickett attributed much of his success against Tulane to the offensive

"It seemed like there were holes everywhere," Pickett said. "I had a lot of choices of where to run. The offensive line did a really good job." Pickett, who transferred to K-State from Northwest Mississippi Community College, set high preseason Although he's built more like a ball carrier, Pickett does, however, like to be a receiver on occasion.

"I also like to catch the ball coming out of the backfield," he said. "It gives me a chance to build up some speed and that helps when you're trying to run over a cornerback."

Going into the homecoming game Saturday against Louisiana Tech, Pickett could be somewhat of a question mark.

"I got turf toe against Tulane," Pickett said. "I got it in the first quarter of the game. It was a little sore during the game, but after the game it hurt so bad I could hardly walk.

"(My toe) is sore but I'm going to go with it," Pickett said. "The game plan is to try to improve on my last game's performance."

Drug testing machines swipe Olympic gold medals

By The Associated Press

SEOUL, South Korea - Meet HP GC-MS and its teammate, HP LC-MS. They can barely be budged, let alone run like Ben Johnson. They probably weigh more than Anguel Guenchev can lift.

But these are the guys who put a little bit of fear into every Olympic competitor.

LC-MS and GC-MS are machines. And in their cold, unforgiving, silicon hearts, they call them as they see them and those calls can cost Olympic athletes their gold, their reputations and their futures.

LC-MS and GC-MS zapped and swirled urine samples taken from Guenchev and fellow Bulgarian weightlifter Mitko Grablev, said "diuretics" and home went Angel and Mitko minus their gold medals.

They did the same to the coded sample from Ben Johnson, "This guy's been using steroids," they said, and the world's fastest man, the winner of the race of the century, lost his medal and his place in history.

Cruel-hearted machines, all right.

But no one is questioning their

"The athletic community has accepted this technology as accurate," said Roy Verley, a spokesman for the Hewlett-Packard Co., manufacturer of the machines. "It is extremely unlikely that the machinery could be deceived."

The methods that were applied in this laboratory are well-proven methods applied elsewhere,"said Dr. Robert Dugal, a member of the International Olympic Committee's medical commission.

The machines don't allow for alibis and excuses. Johnson and members of the Canadian Olympic Committee complained the runner's bag may have been tampered with, that the sarsaparilla he drank might have been dosed with stanozolol, the steroid he is accused of taking.

The machines said no.

"From the analysis of the data, it's quite evident that the drug was administered a few times prior to the games and interruption of treatment took place some days and perhaps some weeks before the event," Dugal

LC-MS is short for Liquid Chromatography-Mass Spectrometry. Brother GC is a gas chromatograph. Both work on the same principal.

A minuscule amount of refined urine is injected into the machines. In gas chromatography, the sample is vaporized and divided into individual chemical compounds that are then analyzed by the machine. LC uses a liquid solvent to break down the sample.

The machines can sniff out an individual compound in amounts as small as 1 part per billion. That's like tasting a tablespoon of sugar mixed in the water of an Olympic-size swimming pool.

What comes out of the machines are a series of peaks and valleys on a computer screen that represent each chemical compound. These jagged lines are as separate and distinct as a person's fingerprints.

The machines look at the fingerprints and check them against their dossier of banned drugs.

Students eligible for trip

If you are one of the 4,081 students living in the residence hall system, and are in the stands for the Louisiana Tech and Missouri football games, you're eligible for an all-expenses-paid getaway to Norman, Okla.

Putnam Hall and the athletic department are sponsoring a contest that is open to all students in the Association of Residence Halls. Students register by proof of identification at the east entrance of the stadium according to hall and floor in which they live.

Each week, the floor with the highest percentage attendance will be determined as the winner.

After the K-State-Missouri game, the winning floor from each game will be determined and the overall winner will be drawn at random from the original three winners.

Two residents from the overall winning floor, who attended the game the week in which the highest percentage was recorded, will receive the all-expenses-paid trip to Norman Oct. 15 for the K-State-Oklahoma football game.

The prize includes air travel with the team, hotel accommodations and tickets to the game.

U.S. loses to Soviets in basketball

By The Associated Press

SEOUL, South Korea - The U.S. basketball team lost the second game in its glorious Olympic history Tuesday, bowing to the Soviets 82-76 in a grudge match that has brewered for 16 years and three seconds.

Steve Lewis led a 1-2-3 U.S. sweep of the 400 meters, just onehundredth of a second off the 20-year-old Olympic record, and three more U.S. boxers advanced to the semifinals, assured of at least a bronze medal.

Ben Johnson, whose guilt-edged gold in the 100 meters was stripped from him Tuesday for taking steroids, arrived home in Toronto Tuesday night, dodging hundreds of onlookers and TV cameras at the airport.

A reporter at the airport shouted to his mother, "Did he take steroids?" Gloria Johnson glared and replied emphatically, "No!"

But, instead of glory, there was disgrace as Johnson returned to his adopted Canada. This will change the history of the Olympics," American hurdler Edwin Moses said. "This will change a lot of people's lives."

The U.S. went into its semifinal game against the Soviets trying to avenge the only loss on its 85-1 Olympic record, but now the best the Americans can do is a bronze medal while the Soviets go for gold.

In 1972 at Munich, America met the Soviet Union for the gold medal, and, after the final three seconds were played twice because of referee error and a scoreboard malfunction, the Soviets won 51-50. So angered was the U.S. team that it refused to accept the silver medal.

"Every day Russian people and Russian journalists and TV talk about historic three seconds in Munich," said Alexander Gomelsky, who is coaching his sixth Olympics for the Soviets. "This is a good story, and I like it to be same here."

Lewis won the 400-meter gold in 43.87 seconds, and favored teammate Butch Reynolds, who holds the world record of 43.29, was second in 43.93. Another American, Danny Everett, took the bronze in 44.09. Lewis' time was just.01 seconds off the Olympic mark by Lee Evans of the United States in Mexico City in Three more U.S. boxers, meanwhile advanced into the semifinals, where they are assured of at least a bronze medal. The United States has eight of its 12 boxers still in action, including six in the semifinals.

Those advancing Wednesday morning were Kennedy McKinney of Killeen, Texas, and Kenneth Gould of Rockford, Ill., and Ray Mercer of Jacksonville, Fla.

McKinney scored a 5-0 victory over Stephen Mwema of Kenya in the 119-pound division, and Gould was a unanimous winner over Joni Nyman of Finland at 147 pounds. Mercer knocked down Italian Luigi Gaudiano and stopped him in the first round of their 201-pound fight.

"I clearly outboxed the guy for three rounds," McKinney said. "I don't want a bronze, I want a gold."

Wamego chosen for face-lift

From Staff and Wire Reports

Wamego was one of five cities picked Tuesday to participate in the National Main Street Program, bringing the number of Kansas communities involved in the program to Manhattan is already a member of the program.

State and national Main Street staff members are scheduled to visit Wamego Oct. 7, and the other four communities that same week.

Hays, Pittsburg, Oberlin and Peabody were also selected for the program Tuesday, said Harland Priddle, secretary of commerce.

Manhattan has participated in the program for three years and was just accepted for another three years, said Manhattan project manager Kim Brecheisen.

The program is designed to assist communities in revitalizing their downtown areas by providing them with professional training and technical assistance in organization, design, promotion and economic restructuring.

The state contracts with the National Main Street Center for the services, which are paid for by the participating communities.

Four contributers to the Manhattan Mainstreet Project - the city, county, Forest Cities Development Inc. and the Chamber of Commerce donate $58,000 each year, Brecheisen said. Other funds are provided through private contributors and dues paid by the city program's 70 members, Brecheisen said.

The donated funds cover the cost of an economic developer hired by the Manhattan Main Street Project to evaluate what business types are needed in the city and where they should be located, she said.

Awaiting Bentsen's arrival, Stacey Coleman, a student at the University of Osteopathic Medicine in Kansas City held a sign which read, "Bush: head for the mountains."

"I think it should be the slogan of the '80s," she said.

Coleman described herself as "a Democrat to the core. I'm totally in favor of all the things (Dukakis and Bentsen) stand for.

"These guys are going to make my loans," she said.

Shuttle launch today

By The Associated Press

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. -Discovery's five astronauts, anxious to break an agonizing 32-month drought in American spaceflight, were "elated to be headed for space" Wednesday as the overnight countdown began for today's midmorning

NASA officials were admittedly nervous, but confident. "The space shuttle is ready to fly," said shuttle administrator Richard Truly, adding, "Even the weather is looking good."

Late Wednesday night, Air Force weather spokesman Mike Beeman estimated there was a 90 percent chance the weather would permit a launch today. But he said winds that were currently 10 knots out of the north were expected to shift to eastnortheast by this morning, which would blow across the landing runway. Launch criteria allows no more than a 12-knot crosswind, in case the orbiter must return for an emergency landing.

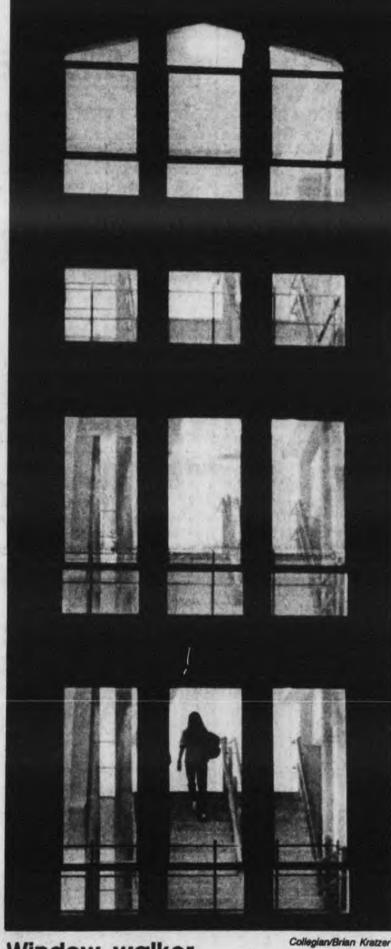

"We're real concerned about what those winds are going to do tomorrow morning," Beeman said. "It's something we're watching real, real

The ship, obscured for weeks behind a giant scaffold, stood in full view after NASA retracted the structure. The process took place hours early, so "workers will have a head start" on final countdown procedures. The count resumed at midevening Wednesday after a day-long, scheduled hold.

Fueling was to begin about 12:40 a.m. CST, with the craft bathed in brilliant spotlights.

"This has been a long 21/2 years," he said of the difficult period since the Challenger accident in 1986. Liftoff was scheduled for 8:59 a.m. CST, with a 21/2 -hour window to take care of weather or technical delays.

After launch officials gave preliminary go-ahead for overnight fueling of Discovery, Truly passed the news to Frederick H. Hauck, the shuttle commander.

Lapping to resign effective July 1

By Susan L'Ecuver Senior Staff Writer

Mark Lapping has announced his resignation as dean of the College of Architecture and Design, effective July 1, 1989.

The announcement was not unexpected by administrators. Lapping said when he accepted the position as dean in 1984, he stressed that he would only serve for one five-year

"I think there are just too many people who stay in administrative offices for too long," Lapping said. "If I haven't accomplished what I set out to do in five years, why would I be able to do it in six or even seven years?

"I was brought in as a change agent," he said. "It's time for new energy and new vision."

Lapping, who will be 43 when his term as dean ends, will remain at K-State as a faculty member in the Department of Regional and Community Planning. He already teaches three or four classes each year - one of the few deans who do so - and maintains regular research and scholarship activities.

"I'm still growing," Lapping said. "I really don't know who I want to be when I grow up."

said Lapping will be taking a cut in

"He will be getting one of our higher professorial positions because of his background," he said. "His pay will have an adjustment downward."

In a University press release issued Wednesday, President Jon Wefald praised Lapping's accomplishments as dean.

"Under Dean Lapping's leadership, our College of Architecture and Design has continued to evolve into one of the finest professional schools in the nation," he said.

"In particular, he has worked with his faculty in developing programs which have benefited the professional development of our students while providing outstanding service to community, state and national governmental agencies and the people they represent."

One of Lapping's main accomplishments has been the establishment of the Regents Center for Architecture Studies in Kansas City, a program which allows fifth-year seniors to complete their studies in a metropolitan environment that offers more opportunties than are found in a rural setting

Another accomplishment has been an increase in the amount of scholar-

Robert F. Kruh, associate provost, ships for the college's student funds, from $16,000 to $130,000 in only four years.

"During my three years at K-State, few, if any, have done more to advance the faculty, programs and graduates of a given college while promoting the entire mission of the University than has Mark Lapping," Wefald said.

Robert Burnham, head of the Department of Architecture, said the college would be "sorry to see him

"He's been a vigorous, forceful leader who's taken us through some rough times," Burnham said. "If the enrollment cap goes through ... the next dean will have a significantly different time of it than this one has.

With an enrollment cap, the new dean will not have as much of the "fight about resources" that has occupied much of Lapping's time as dean, he said.

A search committee will be formed during the next few weeks to select eight to 10 candidates for the position. Kruh said he expects administrators may start interviewing on campus as early as March or April in order to have the position filled by

Availability, quality topic of meeting

By The Collegian Staff

The focus of today's Student Housing Task Force meeting will be on the quality and availability of University student housing.

The task force, formed by the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce, will meet at 3:30 p.m. in the Chamber of Commerce board room.

The task force was designed to study housing problems facing students due to K-State's recruitment and growth objectives. The members plan to submit their recommendations on short-term and long-term solutions to the Chamber by Nov. 15.

Today, members of the task force will discuss past, present and future issues that influence the quality and availability of student housing, said Scott Sewell, director of public affairs for the Chamber of Commerce.

Other issues to be discussed in meetings before the publication of the report include alternative approaches to off-campus and oncampus housing, and an analysis of current zoning and land availability in Manhattan.

The task force will discuss with private developers the feasibility of their participation in student housing and will also determine the best approach businesses should take to provide increased housing without creating an oversupply.

The task force will be chaired by Rick Mann, former mayor and city commissioner. Other members include Bob Haines, Columbia Savings; Kent Glasscock, city commissioner and president of Kansas Lumber Homestore; Wayne Sloan, BHS Construction; Bill Edison, Union National Bank and Trust Co.; and Bill Muir, K-State's director of economic development and director of the KSU Foundation.

One in five Guaranteed Student Loans is defaulted, costing the federal government more than $1 billion a year, according to the U.S. General Acounting Office. The program's problems have received national attention as lawmakers and presidential candidates seek to reduce the $1.6 billion the federal government spends annually to cover the delinquent loans. Congressional debate over the fate of the loans was scheduled for Monday but was postponed. The Reagan administration, the Senate and the House agreed to postpone legislation until February so that further research can be done.

Former Secretary of Education William Bennett has proposed cutting off GSLs to universities where 20 percent or more of borrowing students fail to repay.

Larry Moeder, associate director of the office of Student Financial Assistance, said K-State's default rate is 12.6 percent. He said also that he does not see it increasing in the future. "K-State students have a good track record for repaying their loans," Moeder said. Bennet's charge that students receive the federally-insured loans and then use the money to buy stereos or take vacations at the beach has drawn sharp criticism from educators and lawmakers.

"I think that statement is very outdated," Moeder said. "A few years ago, student loans were very easy to receive. This allowed some students to use the money for things other than education."

Rep. Jim Slattery, agreed with Moeder that Bennet's philosophy is outdated.

has been changed significantly since Bennet brought the problem to national attention last

"We have made it tougher for students to receive government-backed loans," Slattery

Janet Marguia, legislative assistant for Slattery, said since the Reagan administration cut significantly the Pell grant, GSLs have become more important. "The Pell Grants were designed for financially stressed students, but, since the cuts, the GSLs have stepped in to take up the slack," Marguia said.

Although more money is being used to cover defaulted loans, the number of total loans also has risen sharply, and the national percentage of loans defaulted is the same as it was eight years ago, Slattery said.

Marguia said proprietary schools are one source of unpaid student loans. These schools typically attract low-income students who receive GSLs. In some cases, these schools fail to train students well enough that they can

Concert may not sell out

By The Collegian Staff

When The Beach Boys play Bramlage Coliseum's first concert, they may not be playing to a sell-out crowd. As of Wednesday, 4,982 tickets had been sold. Bramlage will seat about 8,000 for the concert, said Charlie Thomas, coliseum director.

Bramlage can seat up to 13,500 for some events, but the seats directly behind the stage will not be used for this concert, Thomas said.

In addition, some seats on the sides of the stage may not be available and will not be sold until the sound system and stage are ready.

The coliseum is selling the seats directly facing the stage first, he said.

"Most of their equipment is hung from the steel beams so there shouldn't be side stacks (of sound or lighting equipment) in the way," said Thomas.

KU shows stable enrollment

LAWRENCE - Final figures for the fall semester show stabilized enrollment at the University of Kansas, with a total headcount of 28,403 for the Lawrence campus, the KU Medical Center and off-campus courses.

Figures for the 20th day of classes, which was Monday, were announced Wednesday.

The total was down 317, about 1 percent, from last fall's record 28,720, and is less than one-half of 1 percent above the 28,259 of two years ago.

'The university has achieved its stated objective," said Chancellor Gene A. Budig. "For the first time in several years, the Lawrence campus has been able to respond effectively to legitimate student needs."

Enrollment at Lawrence and in off-campus courses totaled 26,020, down 286 from last fall. The largest decline was in undergraduate enrollment in the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences. The college has 13,258 students this fall, compared with 13,721 last year and 12,917 in 1986.

Officials: Panic unnecessary

TOPEKA - State officials are worried that Kansans are panicking about the dangers posed by concentrations of radon gas in their homes - a threat they say is not significant and creates a good environment for con artists.

In fact, Attorney General Robert T. Stephan and Stanley Grant, secretary of health and environment, scheduled a series of news conferences across the state today to urge state residents not to rush into buying home-testing kits or contracting with companies for tests. They also said Kansans who want to have their homes tested should be wary.

"We are concerned that so much misinformation and incomplete information has been spread through the population of Kansas that there is a real threat of persons being frightened into spending money unnecessarily," Grant told reporters in Topeka.

Stephan added: "We mutually agreed this was not only a health issue, but certainly a consumer issue. The field is ripe for fraud. It is made to order for the scam artist."

Radon is a colorless, odorless gas produced naturally in the earth when uranium in rocks starts to decay. It can seep into basements and become trapped in homes.

Berdella case may be moved

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - A new judge was assigned Wednesday to the murder trial of Robert A. Berdella - and one of his first duties will be to act on a motion to move the highly publicized case out of the area.

Lawyers for Berdella argued in a motion Tuesday that the trial should be moved to St. Louis because adverse publicity had made it impossible for him to get a fair trial in Jackson County or western Missouri.

Assistant Public Defenders Pat Berrigan and Charles Rogers filed the motion for a change of venue and asked that another judge preside over the case until it is moved. Jackon County Circuit Judge Forest W. Hanna agreed to the change of judge and assigned the case to Judge Robert A. Meyers, who will rule on the change of venue request.

Rogers would not say why he asked that a different judge preside over the pretrial proceedings, which could take months. A Jackson County grand jury indicted Berdella Sept. 2 for the murder of Robert A. Sheldon, 23, of Arleta, Calif., and prosecutors are seeking the death penalty.

"Hopefully, they're making it as safe as humanly possible," Owings said.

Contaminated milk confiscated

MANILA, Philippines - Officials raided a suburban warehouse Wednesday and confiscated 4,600 cans of powdered milk suspected to have been contaminated by radioactive fallout from the 1986 Chernobyl nuclear accident in the Soviet Union.

Health Secretary Alfredo Bengzon, who led the raiders to a warehouse in the Manila suburb of Paranaque, said the imported milk was part of a shipment of dairy products returned to Western Europe in 1986 after the accident.

He said he ordered an investigation into how part of the shipment was sent back to the Philippines.

Last month, health officials also recovered more than 700 cans of the contaminated milk that were distributed to several provinces outside Manila.

The local distributors of the milk product denied knowledge of the shipment.

An explosion and fire at the Soviet nuclear plant in April 1986 killed 31 Soviets and sent a cloud of radiation around the world. It was the world's worst nuclear power accident.

Halls have election; students pick Bush

By The Collegian Staff

And the winner is ... George

The vice president won the National Residence Hall Honorary mock election Wednesday with 55 percent of the votes. Michael Dukakis received 43 percent of the total of 533 votes cast in the residence halls' food centers.

"I was kind of surprised, I thought Bush would win by a larger margin," said Dave Haden, director of Haymaker Hall and co-adviser to the honorary.

"We took advantage of this opportunity to provide information (about Democratic candidates)," said Rob Brown, sophomore in political science and president of the Young Democrats.

"I hope it had a strong emphasis on voting," he said.

Only 20 percent of 18- to 26-year-old voters cast their ballots in national presidential elections and that is a very discouraging number, he said.

Students participating in the election responded favorably.

Condom machines may be installed

By Chris Koger Collegian Reporter

Increased awareness and concern for AIDS has prompted a campus committee to advocate the installation of condom vending machines at sites on campus that will be accessible nights and weekends.

Don Seedle, chairman of the Communicable Disease Committee and professor of public health, said that although condoms are available at Lafene Student Health Center during the day, the machines would make them available at night and on weekends.

"Condoms are available near campus at the various convenience stores, but even though people are more open-minded toward condoms. it might be embarrassing for them to go in and publicly ask (for condoms)," Seedle said.

"With the machines, there isn't anyone who has to know about the purchase, because it's personal," he

The condom machines were first considered by the committee in December 1987, but no action was taken due to the results of a survey conducted at that time.

"Last year the feeling was that Lafene and the various convenience stores around campus took care of the need for condoms. We looked at various options, including machines in the Union, and the student groups involved in the survey felt these options weren't warranted at the time," said Robert Krause, vice president for institutional advancement. Committee members said the machines would promote safe sex. "Our primary interest is to help protect students against AIDS. We are not making moral judgments about sex or promoting birth control. We are concerned with health," See-

"If students are going to have sex, they should be able to have safe sex," he said.

Krause said a final agreement on the machines will not be reached until he meets with the committee and determines if another survey is decision should be made if there needs to be a full-blown examination of the issue," he said.

Seedle said an ideal site would be the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex, although the administration would decide about the placement of the machines. Other possible sites include residence halls and greek houses.

Thomas Frith, director of housing, said the decision concerning the possibility of condom machines in the residence halls should be left to the hall residents.

"I think if we are going to promote safe sex, this would be the intelligent and desirable thing to do. It should be up to the students in the halls.

Teachers to close store, pay fine

By Brian E. Hummell Staff Writer

Two Manhattan High School teachers have been ordered to close their liquor store for 15 days beginning Saturday and pay a $500 fine for selling liquor to a minor.

Kansas Alcoholic Beverage Control issued the order to Marvin Colbert and Rickey Zellers, owners of Colbert-Zellers Retail Liquor Store, 501 S. 17th St.

Leonard Robinson, KABC attorney, said the order calls for the store to close unless an appeal is filed.

Colbert, teacher at the district's continuation school, said he and Zellers, an English teacher, are in the process of filing an appeal, but they do not know when the appeal will take place.

The charges stem from a six-keg party April 22 in rural Pottawatomie County. Police broke up the party, which was attended by about 300 Manhattan students.

"The evidence shows the arrangements (to buy the kegs) were made on school grounds," Robinson said. "I've never seen a case like that. I hope I never see a case like that again, and I don't think I will see one like that again."

Robinson said this was the liquor store's first offense of selling to a minor, but most first offenses involve substantially less liquor.

"This is more liquor than most cases," Robinson said. "I've never had that much liquor involved."

Robinson said the two can ask for an appeal of the order and file a motion to stay the order with the Secretary of Revenue. A date is set for hearings in which more evidence can be presented and the court transcript can be reviewed.

An appeal could change the penalties, but appeals usually focus on the offense itself, Robinson said.

USD 383 Superintendent Hal Rowe said no action has been taken against the teachers, but the matter is being monitored.

"We're trying to get the facts straightened out," Rowe said.

Colbert said he expects the school board to take some official action. "I know there will be an investigation," Colbert said. Joleen Hill, school board member, would not discuss the case.

Abortion-inducing drug may benefit women

incite more arguments, and inspire more protests and counterprotests than abortion.

Unlike many topics of debate, abortion is not a simple question of right and wrong. Sometimes it seems mostly right; sometimes it seems mostly wrong. Rarely is it a simple decision. Mostly, abortion is deeply entwined in our society's values and morals.

For example, abortion deals with the termination of a human life. This normally would be considered murder, a definite wrong. But abortion is not that simple. People are still arguing over whether a fetus is a human life. Different groups have different ideas about when the fetus is considered human. Some say at conception, others say at birth, and many say after the first trimester, as well as a variety of times in between.

Another problem is that abortion deals with individual liberties and personal preservation. The public must decide if a woman has the right to do what she wishes with her ew topics stir up more controversy, body since it is her property. Does a woman have a right to have an abortion when her life is endangered, when the baby will be deformed, or when she is obviously incompetent to be a mother? There are strong arguments either way. Factions have developed, often referred to as pro-life and pro-choice.

It will take years to determine the moral justification for abortion. Perhaps one will never be found on such an emotionally charged issue. The debate over the right to life, however, will continue. In fact, a new furor should be expected from pro-life groups throughout the United States as a new abortion-inducing drug is being considered for introduction into the country.

The drug, RU 486, can be used to induce abortion during the first trimester, and is safer and less expensive than surgical abortion. It was developed in France by the Roussel-Uclaf Co., and was approved for marketing in France and China last week. Since it has been approved in those countries, it is expected that a small American company will apply to the Food and Drug Administration to market the drug in the United States. The company, Gynopharma Inc., would neither confirm nor deny any such reports.

Commentary CATHERINE

> DOUD Collegian Columnist

eanwhile, the French are optimistic about the drug and expect it to replace up to half of the surgical abortions in their country.

This drug has a lot going for it. It is substantially cheaper and less harmful to the mother than surgical abortion. However, just because the drug is effective does not mean for medical practitioners. that it will be accepted in the United States. It has several obstacles to get around first.

First of all, like other possibly controversial drugs, it probably will take several years before it gets government approval. That will be the easy part. The hard part? Fighting antiabortion protests and boycotts already forming against the drug.

Various national pro-life groups are protesting the drug, not just because it causes abortions, but because they fear that it will inspire more abortions, since abortions will be easier and less dangerous. The National Right to Life Committee is already organizing a boycott committee to stop the manufacture and sale of the drug in the United States.

Why all the controversy? Abortions, right or wrong, are happening in the United States right now. The way in which they are happento the woman. This drug, if approved, would substantially reduce costs, reduce risk of injury or loss of life to women, and save time the pro-lifers really want?

The major argument against the drug that it will encourage more abortions - does not seem to be as significant as the drug's inherent advantages.

here is no data to show that the number of abortions would increase. Abortion is a difficult thing to do, and is charged with emotion and guilt. Few people take it lightly, or would decide to have an abortion just because it was a little

However, there are many women who do have abortions without medical aid because of financial reasons. Some fear of the trauma of surgery. For these women, the drug may be the encouragement needed to get them out of the alley slaughterhouses and into the clinics, ing is fairly expensive and carries some risk where it is more likely that the women will survive the procedure.

Isn't saving as many lives as possible what

Clinic shouldn't give unrequested tests

People shouldn't be forced to pay for services they don't want or need, even in a doctor's office. Lafene Student Health Center is no exception. When a woman goes to LaFemme Clinic for a routine Pap smear, that is all she should get, not additional tests for chlamydia and gonorrhea.

Doctors at LaFemme started combining tests for chlamydia and gonorrhea with the Pap smears last year. The Pap smear, a routine test for cervical cancer, costs $10. The gonorrhea test is $5 and the chlamydia test adds another $15 to the patient's bill.

These are unnecessary expenses for women and LaFemme. All women are susceptible to cancer, but not to venereal disease. Women who aren't sexually active can develop cancer, but chlamydia and gonorrhea are contagious and passed by sexual contact. If a woman has never been sexually active, there is no need for these tests.

LaFemme does not even have the facilities to test the cell cultures for chlamydia. The samples are sent to Rema Lab in Missouri. The results are then mailed to LaFemme. This weeklong process wastes time and money. The tests for gonorrhea are sent to the State Department of Health for processing. The state cannot process cultures for chlamydia. These tests are not required by Kansas law. It is LaFemme's own policy to perform them.

Men are not tested for venereal diseases unless they request it, and women deserve the same option. Women who have never had sexual contact can't get infected and should not have to pay for tests they don't need.

I PLEDGE MORE JOBS,

Learn to enjoy satire

It would be safe to say that I am disgusted with the attitudes of letter writers Nichols and Bradley toward the column "Insights into the subtleties of male bonding." Frankly, while the column may not have been a literary masterpiece, I and dozens of others found it a refreshing change of pace from the solemnity of other columns. So to Nichols and Bradley,

I offer two suggestions: 1. Learn to appreciate satire and humor. Being able to laugh at ourselves is important, and Mark Schmeller's column made many of us do that. Appreciate something for its own sake, not for whether or not it meets your minimum daily requirement of dull social commentary.

2. If you are looking for enlightening or revolutionary literature, I suggest abandoning the Collegian for the Christian Science Monitor, the Atlantic Monthly, the National Review or Pravda.

Miss Doud has just as much right to be bored with Elvis as Paul Brooks' has to be critical of her. Telling Doud to "bear with it" only promotes a lack of involvement at the time in her life when she should be involved and seek to change what she believes wrong.

As long as lengends like Elvis Presley and, my personal favorite, Marilyn Monroe continue to grace the shopping centers, there will always be scandalous rumors. The public is simply asked to do what the stars did while they were alive: Take the good with the bad and make the best of both.

In response to his questionable existence, the simple fact remains that Elvis did, indeed, commit suicide. He either killed himself in the literal sense with a drug overdose, or in the figurative sense when he chose to hideout and let his image die. Does it really matter? No one can bring him back from the dead nor can they drag him from K Mart or any of the other places he was supposedly visiting. I'm in full support of keeping the truth of his legend alive, including buying his posters, but perhaps it's time to stop worrying about how popular he is and finally let him rest in peace, living or not.

As far as the "horrendous debt" of which Mr. New Jersey speaks, it has received its greatest increase in the eight years of the Reagan administration. The debt that Reagan has accumulated is greater than the total national debt accumulated before he took office.

I think Americans must vote for the party and candidate they conscientiously feel will be just and trustworthy. I will vote for the Democrats.

Let's get one thing straight. Each party has done wonderful things for our country, and each party has made mistakes. Before you start blaming the other guy, you better take a good look at yourself.

Other Perspectives

University of Indiana and city officials announced an agreement that promises to take Dean of Students Michael Gordon's anti-alcohol policy to new heights. Under the agreement, the names of IU students arrested by Bloomington police for alcohol-related offenses will be given to IU officials who may opt to take further disciplinary actions.

The idea that students' conduct off campus will be scrutinized by the University is absurd. The integrity of the educational process depends on conduct in the classroom, not in the barroom.

Only two things seem clear about Gordon's anti-alcohol policies, which have been expanding in the wake of rioting at Varsity Villas last year. Namely, students aren't going to give up drinking, and Gordon is not going to give up trying to make them stop.

Therein lies the rub.

Legends die slowly

Editor,

Well, I resisted as long as I could. Here's one more person's opinion on the everpopular Elvis Presley.

I've followed the recent rumor that Elvis is still alive from the headlines on supermarket smut-magazines to the supposed taped telephone conversations, to Catherine Doud's article and, finally, to Paul Brooks' letter to the editor and I am still not convinced that Elvis is alive.

Recently, however, Elvis' "liveliness" has not been the issue as much as popularity has been. Granted, he is still a celebrated artist. By simply thumbing through posters at local card boutiques one will be certain to encounter more photos of James Dean, Marilyn Monroe and, yes, Elvis Presley than prints of such current stars as Glenn Close, Jack Nicholson or Meryl Streep. Elvis, having had such an impact on the music industry, is more than entitled to the publicity he receives today.

A legend as great as this is not going to prosper or suffer from an article in the college newspaper such as the one submitted by Catherine Doud. Paul Brooks' insinuation that an article "similiar" to Miss Doud's would be written by a "nasty college journalist" is utterly ridiculous. Compared to the crass articles found in supermarket smut magazines, Catherine Doud's article, which was simply stating her disgust with the Elvis fad, was written in perfectly good taste.

Accusations wrong

On Friday, Sept. 9, 1988 the U.S. Senate passed a measure that condemns Iraq for allegedly "using poison gas against the Kurdish minority in Iraq." The resolution also includes stiff economic sanctions including voting against any loans by world banks. The measure took 18 hours from drafting to the final vote! We wonder why?

The timing of this measure comes directly after Iraq has forced Khomeni's regime to accept the calls for peace and start the negotiation under the U.N. umbrella. We still wonder why?

Let's state these facts: Fact 1: The Iraqi government has extended an open invitation to check into this alleged

Fact 2: The Turkish Foreign Ministy published a report stating that a medical committee has examined 12,000 refugees at a camp just outside Diyarbakir. The report revealed that there is no of chemical warfare used against Kurdish refugees.

Researchers experiment on winter wheat

Red wheat not only type

By Heather Huntington Collegian Reporter

K-State researchers are helping to change the idea that Kansans can only produce traditional hard red winter wheat.

For years, Kansans have grown a variety of wheat known as hard red winter wheat because of its reliability and bread-baking properties.

However, a different type of hard wheat that has many of the same properties as red wheat could become a part of Kansas agriculture, said Don Keesling, president of the American Hard White Wheat Producer's Association.

A type of hard white winter wheat has been developed that could "give Kansas farmers an alternate crop," said Chuck Walker, professor of grain science.

"Actually, it developed quite by accident," said Joe Martin, wheat breeder at K-State's experiment station in Hays. Martin is growing a test crop of the white wheat to help with its research.

In wheat breeding, crossing two red seed coats will sometimes produce a white wheat coat, Martin said. The white kernels are usually disregarded. However, this particular white wheat stood out.

"Its performance convinced us to continue with it," Martin said. "In six years of testing, it was continually at the top of performance tests."

United States more competitive in the foreign marketplace, said Robert Bequette, cereal chemist in grain

In foreign markets, such as the Middle East and the Orient, white wheat is preferred over red wheat. People there prefer the purer color, and many believe the taste is sweeter and more appealing, Bequette said.

One of the United States' main foreign competitors seems to be the Australians, who grow only white wheat and live closer to the Oriental market, he said.

"The Australians are very competitive. They can match almost anything we grow, and they export a very high percentage (of white wheat),'

Hard white winter wheat also has a future in the United States, Keesling

"Bran from white wheat can be very valuable as an additive to food products for people who want to add fiber to their diet without adding a bitter taste," he said.

K-State is conducting a two-year project studying the uses of hard white wheat in products such as hamburger buns and hard rolls.

Walker said K-State researchers would also like to make a bakery premix product with the white wheat. The pre-mix would be similar to mixes found in restaurants where the baker adds water, bakes the mixture two major drawbacks. The wheat has a tendency to sprout in the kernel when exposed to high amounts of moisture, Bequette said.

The sprouting degrades the starch in the wheat and destroys all functional properties of the flour, Martin

Identity-preserve grains need more care, money in handling

By Heather Huntington Collegian Reporter

K-State researchers are growing an experimental crop of an identitypreserve grain, and that requires extra care and has added costs.

Identity-preserve grains must be traced through the entire production and marketing process. Hard white winter wheat is one type of grain that requires this special care, said Don Keesling, president of the American Hard White Winter Wheat

Last year, K-State's experiment station in Hays produced between 700 and 800 bushels of hard white winter wheat, said Joe Martin, wheat breeder at the station.

The researchers produce the hard white winter wheat and sell it to the American Hard White Winter Wheat Association, which then markets the grain to mills.

Great Plains Red Inc., a wheatmarketing company in Wakeeny, specializes in identity-preserve grain and realizes it has extra production costs, said Loren Wilson, quality control agronomist for the company. Identity preservation is a way for the company to produce exceptional wheat, Wilson said.

varieties of wheat are kept identitypreserved, Wilson said.

■ White winter wheat is physically different from the hard red winter wheat which is commonly found in Kansas. The wheats must be kept separate to maintain their appearances.

In some cases, two hard red wheat kernels may appear identical, but if the same product is produced with both kernels, the results may be drastically different. These kernels need to be identity-preserved to retain their qualities.

Often the seed may be kept for "certified seed production." In this case the farmer is guaranteed that no other type of wheat is blended with the seeds so producers will receive the type of crop they expect.

But to identity-preserve a grain requires extra time and money, Wil-

"Now our goal is finding quality wheat that mills would like to produce," Wilson said. "Until there is a need in the market place, we won't produce it."

Geriatric work unpopular

By Jenny Reschke Collegian Reporter

Although the elderly population in the United States continues to grow, students aren't capitalizing on the subsequent job increases, said James Ward, associate professor of sociology, anthropology and social work.

Ward said social work students are not going into the field because they are reluctant to work with older

This reluctance to work with the older population is ironic, really, when you look at the growth in this area," he said. "By the year 2035, over 20 percent of the population will be over 65."

Ward said he observes a hesitancy among students in the social work program to choose a career with the elderly.

Evidence of this problem lies in that out of the more than 20 seniors in social work, only a few students are truly interested in careers in aging, said Melanie Starns, senior in social

She also said that out of the student body, only about 10 belong to the Gerontology Club.

These small figures are confusing, Stams said, because by 1990, nursing homes in at least 38 states will be required to employ a full-time, licensed social worker.

"You're going to get social workers who are unprepared for the aging issues," she said.

Starns attributed this imbalance to America's negative image of the elderly. Possible explanations for this image, she said, include a fear of sickness.

"What people often don't realize is that not all old people are either 100 percent able to take care of themselves, or they require full-time care," Starns said. "Only 5 percent of people over 65 are in nursing homes for permanent placement."

This attitude is unique to the United States, because age is revered in Asian and Latin cultures, she said.

However, through the service requirements in several social work classes, some students do take advantage of the chance to work with elderly people.

Students can choose to work with the elderly when they are matched with a 50-hour project depending on their interests, said Marvin Kaiser, aging, especially in terms of acting associate dean of the College of Arts and Sciences.

Linda George, director of resident services at Meadowlark Hills Skilled Health Care Center, said the center hasn't had any students through the volunteer classes recently.

"Why this is, I don't know," she said. "We do have a great number of volunteers in general, but there are never enough."

Starns is working on a project through her position at Manhattan Senior Center to link older people with K-State students, through such means as shared housing. The intergenerational program, if it receives federal funding, will "hopefully alleviate age stereotypes, on the parts of both younger and older people," she said.

'Girl' misnomer in Girl Scouts: campus group available to all

By Stuart Puls Collegian Reporter

Imagine a Girl Scout organization for college students in which female and male students are welcome to join.

A coed Girl Scout organization like this exists at K-State.

The KSU Girl Scouts, which formed about five years ago, is a coed organization open to all students. Members do not have to have past scouting experience.

"We are an organization of males and females working together to help the community where ever needed," said Girl Scout liaison Linda Williams.

Katie Wynne, sophomore in business management and the president of the KSU Girl Scouts, said although the organization carries the banner "Girl Scouts," men are welcomed and encouraged to

"Last year there were a couple of guys involved with the Girl Scouts. The title probably scares most guys off. Maybe we should switch the name to just scouts, since there isn't a Boy Scouts organization on campus," Wynne said.

The organization, which has about 15 members, serves the community through service projects.

The group is planning to help operate first-aid stations and checkpoints at the Volksmarch set for Oct. 8 at Tuttle Creek Reservoir The Volksmarch, which the scouts are helping to sponsor, is a German-oriented event and is similar to a walk-a-thon.

In March, the scouts plan to sell cookies in the Union.

Aspartame

Dieters' miracle gains approval — almost

After years of complaints and safety concerns, it now appears the artifly off savetner Aspartame — better known by its brand name Nutters and the constant.

Asparlable, which is 180 to 200 times sweeter than sucrose; is used in about 70 percent of all artificially sweetened foods, including most soft drinks, since 1983 when it was approved by the United States Food and Dring Administration.

However, things were not always so easy for the upstart sugar substrate.

Indeed there were many years of butter struggle before it successfully contempted the article of sweetners market.

When the FDA first approved aspartame in 1974 for use in cold breaktast cereals, chewing gunt, dry beverage mixes, instant tea and coffee, gelatins, puddings, fillings, dairy product analogue toppings and table-top overtiers, few people thought it would become one of the most controverstal, and ironically, one of the most stringently tested food, additives on the market.

After inniterous studies by the manufacturer of aspartame, as well as such health organizations as the Centers for Disease Control, the American Medical Association and the American Academy of Pediatries, the product has survived charges that it causes everything from brain damage to endocrine dystanction and manie-depressive illness, from behavioral and nervous disorders to migraine lieudaches and hyperactive child syndrome.

Carole Setser, professor of foods and nutrition, who has conducted research on aspartamic, said she is confident it is a safe product. She said aspartamic has undergone more studies than most other products approved by the EDA.

"It I felt it (aspartame) were unsate. I wouldn't use it," she said

In fact, after studies linked the sugar substitute saccharine to armary cancer in laboratory animals, aspartame has emerged as the undisputed champion of sugar substitutes. By 1988, Scientific American reported that Americans were consuming more than 3,800 tons of aspartame animally, and in Canada, aspartame is the only artificial sweetner considered.

A recent study, funded in part by the Nutrasweet Company, used a group of 40 adults who complained of headaches after eating or drinking aspartame products. The study found the sample group was a tirally more likely to have headaches after taking placebos than aspartame.

However, while studies have put to rest most general health concern related to aspartame, it could be a risk to at least one small minority of the population.

For people with a metabolism disorder known as phenylketomiria, a PKU, consuming too much aspartante could be dangerous. According to Science Digest, PKU is a rare genetically transferred disease whice inhibits its victums from metabolizing phenylalanine, one of the aminiacids, in aspartance.

Because individuals with PKU cannot properly metabolize the amino acid, they need to control their phenylalarine intake. For this reason, products containing aspartame, such as soft drinks, must include on their labels the statement. Thenylkenoments counting thems belong to

Of late, however, questions have surfaced not about aspartanies safty, but about its effectiveness as a diet and

At a conference at Harvard University in the fall of 1987, researcher discussed the role of of sugar substitutes, such as aspartame, in losin weight.

In the December issue of Health, Michael Torslott, a researcher at the Modell Chemical Senses Center in Philadelphia and a participant at the Harvard conference, is quoted as saying. "We know aspartame is a fair

Blundell argued this is a result of a phenomenon he called this is a result of a phenomenon he called the dual hunger. Whereby people crave calories after home psychological by prepared for them by the sweet taste of the soft drank.

Other researchers claim that artificial sweeteners induce a false sens of security in dieters which leads them into thinking they can eat fach calorie foods to make up for the diet soft drinks which they use to was down cake, ice cream and other high-calorie foods.

But the manufacturer of aspartame, the Searle Company, is not buter about questions concerning the effectiveness of its product in a diet. Robert Moser, vice president of medical affairs for the Searle Company, said, "Satiety is far more complex than food chemicals. There is

Game

Earn a windfall this fall by playing the K-State Center for Economic Education Stock Market Game.

The game, sponsored by the Securities Industry Association, is a 10-week simulation of the New York Stock Exchange and the American Stock Exchange.

The game allows students to trade with a hypothetical sum of $100,000, which is invested in a portfolio of common stocks traded on the New York and American stock exchanges. The program is designed to educate junior high, high school, and college students about the financial investment system and how it works, according to the center's

"I think it's very valuable for high school and junior high (students) because ... there is an opportunity to inform them about economics and news that breaks from week to week," said Steve Huenneke, field director for the Kansas Council on Economic Education and economics

The game gives students experience in how to trade in the stock market, the costs and benefits involved in economic decisionmaking. They also learn about buyers and market demand, sellers and market supply, sources and uses of money capital and forms of business organizations, according to information provided by the center.

"From day one to the 10th week, (students) can buy and sell stocks as they wish," said Sharon Lindell, administrative assistant for the Students are advised to find a company, find out what it supplies, and become familiar with their market in general, said Steve Harrison, investment representative for Edward D. Jones and Co., 1014 Poyntz Ave.

"One team picked baseball cards as a commodity, thinking it would increase in the spring before baseball season and they made money," Lindell said.

Students take a great deal of ownership in the simulation, said Bill Sanderson, economics instructor at Manhattan High School.

"Last fall, when the stock market crashed, I had a team that lost $70,000 — they were very upset," Sanderson said. "It's almost as if they lost their own money."

The transactions are reported each day and sent to the Center for Economic Education to be analyzed by the computing center, Lindell said.

"(Students) get to learn about the ups and downs (of trade) - it's a better way to teach them," Sanderson said.

Meinhardt, Slattery consent to debates

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA - Democratic 2nd District Congressman Jim Slattery and his Republican opponent, Phil Meinhardt, have agreed to make five joint appearances to discuss issues before the Nov. 8 general election.

Slattery proposed Wednesday that the two make three appearances next month, in addition to two already agreed upon. A spokeswoman for Meinhardt said the GOP candidate would accept the three new appearances. Meinhardt's campaign accused Slattery last week of trying to avoid debates.

The Slattery proposal would bring to five the number of scheduled joint appearances in the middle of October, within three weeks of the election. The first is scheduled for Oct. 15 in Leavenworth. It will be videotaped by KTWU, Topeka's public television station, and televised Oct. 17.

The other previously scheduled appearance was Oct. 20 in Lawrence, at a forum sponsored by the Douglas

K-State by three when 'Cats face Louisiana Tech

Mid-Week Commentary

TOM PERRIN

Sports

Columnist

From everything I can gather, K-State is actually favored to win Saturday on the football field for the first time in 20 tries.

I can't get the confirmation I would normally like when making such a claim because the K-State -Louisiana Tech University game was left off the weekly betting lines that appear in newspapers. Could it be a lack of interest?

However, every other source I've the game picks the Wildcats. This includes such reputable sources as long-time Associated Press football writer Herschel Nissenson and The Kickoff, a nationwide football newsletter. Nissenson is picking the 'Cats 31-13, while The Kickoff lists K-State's power rating at 88.0 compared to Louisiana Tech's 81.0, a theoretical victory.

Yes indeed, the 'Cats are supposed to win this week. And after coming so very close two weeks ago in a 20-16 loss to Tulane University, a team supposedly better than Louisiana Tech, K-State looks ripe to win

Saturday. "There's nothing wrong with that," K-State Coach Stan Parrish said when asked to react to his team being favored.

Parrish, having learned his lesson the last two seasons about making brash claims of success, wisely

"If we make as much improvement this week as we did between weeks one and two and weeks two and three, I think we've got a good chance," Parrish said.

Playing Louisiana Tech, 3-8 last year, you would hope a coach would be confident. The Bulldogs don't appear to be much of a football team, although they did open the season with a 21-14 loss to Mississippi State of the Southeastern Conference and beat Nicholls State University last week. In weeks two and three, however, Louisiana Tech was outscored 98-6 by Houston and Wyoming.

K-State, with a bad loss to Tulsa, a close loss to Tulane and a drubbing to a good Iowa team, has a similar history. If nothing else, it should be a close game.

It's also a pressure-packed game seen that is making a prediction for for K-State, which has an incredibly difficult schedule for the next four weeks - Missouri, Oklahoma, Nebraska and Oklahoma State. Having at least one win to look back on would make this stretch from hell a little bit more livable. Finishing 0-4 in the non-conference schedule would be a major setback.

Remembering history and losses in recent years to teams such as Northern Iowa and Austin Peay State, I may be stupid to think K-State will win Saturday. But, somehow, I think K-State is going to pull this one off.

The 'Cat passing attack has been relatively effective so far and should be buoyed by the return of starting quarterback Paul Watson, who missed the first three games of the season. The defense, led by linebacker Maurice Henry, has been solid in each of the last two games. Plus, with Watson back, K-State goes into the game completely healthy.

A collegiate baseball player does not usually pursue a professional career by way of the Marine Corps, but a torn rotator cuff in his right (throwing) arm forced former Arizona State University pitcher Mike Rich to choose a different route, a route leading through Manhattan.

Rich ended his collegiate career in 1983 at Arizona State and entered the Marines for four years. Now he is preparing for next season's minor league spring training while finishing his degree in political science at K-State.

Rich came to K-State because he has a brother here and because he had a tryout with the Kansas City Royals' AA farm club, the Memphis Chicks, and because he needed to be closer than his hometown of Union, N.J.

The tryout went well enough for Rich that he signed a letter of retention with Memphis and was invited to its spring training camp in Mesa, Ariz., which opens in the latter part of March.

win over U.S. in basketball wasn't a fluke Russia's

By The Associated Press

SEOUL, South Korea - Maybe this basketball glasnost is taking things too far.

Look at the facts. When Soviet coach Alexander Gomelski met the media Wednesday after the Soviets' 82-76 humbling of the U.S. basketball squad, did he credit Mother Russia or Marxist-Leninist doctrine for the victory?

No.

"United States basketball and NBA basketball helps my country," said the short, gray, grandfatherly basketball? Gomelski was talking about the National Basketball Association, a decidedly capitalist outfit that has given comfort and aid to the Soviet team. The Soviets have played exhibition games against the Milwaukee Bucks. The Atlanta Hawks toured the USSR and trained with the Soviets in the United Sates.

The Hawks have even spent draft choices on Alexandre Volkov, Raimondas Marchulionis and Valeri Tikhonenko in hopes the Soviet government will let their stars play in the NBA.

The Portland Trailblazers, with a first-round draft interest in Arvidas Sabonis, took in the 7-foot-3 Russian and supervised the therapy on his ruptured Achilles tendon.

Sabonis was doubtful for the Olympics before he got NBA care. He paid back the kindness with 13 points and 13 rebounds against the United States on Wednesday.

At the post-game interview, U.S. Coach John Thompson noted the Sabonis recovery with some irony.

"He's been working hard all summer, and he's improved ... against America's finest," said Thompson, who has been critical about the chummy relationship between the Soviets and the NBA.

"I don't see it as a form of collaboration," he said. "Several NBA teams helped us, too. We lost. The NBA didn't. We understood the circumstances under which we were play-

Thompson wasn't so subdued a few months ago when he complained that the use of U.S. sports medicine to heal Sabonis was like Benedict Arnold handing the British the keys to the fort.

"I see Sabonis as being a fulfillment of Lenin's prophecy: The capitalists are selling the Communists the rope they can hang us with," he said at the time. "We are in direct competition with them, and to prepare Sabonis to play against us just isn't right."

On Wednesday Glasnost Gomelski laughed off Thompson's comments.

But is Thompson supposed to act like a diplomat or a general? That is the heart of the question facing U.S. sports officials and fans. Are the Olympic games a battle for worldwide basketball hegemony or an exchange of friendship and the furtherance of international sports?

In a world where President Reagan promises to share Star Wars secrets once we figure them out, is John Thompson out of step?

Yes, said Glasnost Gomelski, whose basketball is much better than his English.

"The United States and Soviet Union organize good contact in politic, economic, in sports," he said. "All country, all people, very happy for this friendship. People think no problem and maybe Thompson no understand this."

Others on the Soviet squad hope their own government understands this and allow them to play for the NBA.

"All my life I have lived American basketball," said Marchulionis, who scored 19 points on Wednesday. "I like to play in the NBA, but I don't know. Government decide maybe now, yesterday, maybe tomorrow."

The political lines are becoming so blurred that Gomelski looks forward to a time when NBA stars of the magnitude of Magic Johnson and Michael Jordan can join in Olympic competition.

Loss in Seoul marks fourth straight failure

By The Associated Press SEOUL, South Korea - This is

not 1972, and this was no fluke. The 82-76 loss to the Soviet Union in the Olympic basketball semifinals Wednesday was the fourth straight failure in major international tournaments for U.S. men's teams so accustomed to ruling the world. And, according to the coach who will play the Americans for the Olympic bronze medal Thursday night (Thursday morning EDT), there is good reason: The Americans are behind the times. "The U.S. is a very young, inexperienced team ... and they paid the penalty for preparing the team within the United States," said Australian coach Adrian Hurley. The 1987 World University

Games and the World Junior Championships both meant silver medals to Yugoslavia's golds. The Pan Am Games were a showcase for Oscar Schmidt, the shooter from Brazil who flew back with a gold medal while the United States again accepted silver.

But the loss to the Soviet Union came in the Olympics. The only blemish on the U.S. basketball record in the Games had been a loss to the Soviets in 1972 that was so tainted ask of them," Thompson said.

the silver medals were never accepted - they remain in a bank vault in Munich.

There was nothing tainted about this Soviet victory. The United States was beaten by a team that was never bothered by the U.S.'s most potent weapon — pressure defense — and a team which showed there is no substitute for international experience and competition.

The U.S. team should "get out of the country and play under international rules and with international referees. That talent isn't enough. You've got to play," said Hurley.

Well before the Olympics began, U.S. coach John Thompson was telling people that the system used to select the team was out of date, especially considering that the better international teams were using American training methods.

The United States did make a run at the Soviets on Wednesday and got within two points midway through the second half after trailing by 14 just after halftime. But the Soviets held off all challenges and the United States was faced with the possibility of no medal, let alone no gold.

"I think they gave all they could to represent their country and I think that's all their country can actually

University art displayed at bank

By Kevin Kramer Collegian Reporter

One of K-State's "treasures," the Kansas State University Permanent Art Collection, is on display at the Union National Bank.

"The show, 'The KSU Permanent Collection: Highlights from Sixty Years of Art Collecting,' is the first time in many years that a number of works from the collection have been on view at one time," said Jessica Reichman, curator of the collection.

More than 50 works of American, regional and European art, displaying a variety of style, mediums and artists, will be on exhibit, said John Biggs, executive director of the Manhattan Arts Council.

The collection will be on exhibit in the lobby of the bank, 727 Poyntz Ave., until Nov. 11 during regular banking hours, he said.

"We're delighted to have the opportunity to show the works to the people of Manhattan and K-State, and remind them of what a treasure the art collection is to the University," Reichman said.

The exhibit displays art ranging from traditional to contemporary, created by regional and international artists who are popular with the general public, she said.

"The show is historically important," Reichman said.

Watercolors and canvas works by Kansas artists Birger Sandzen and John Steuart Curry are the earliest and most popular works in the collection being displayed, Reichman said.

"The show will exhibit three works from Thomas Hart Benton, one of the most popular traditional artists of this region," she said. The exhibit will include a partial showing of the collection of photographs by Gordon Parks, a native of Fort Scott, Reichman said.

Parks, one of America's outstanding black photographers, donated a collection of 125 of his photos, "Moments Without Proper Names," to the University. The collection spans from 1948 to 1970, and his career as a photojournalist with Life magazine.

Artwork from other contemporary artists displayed in the exhibit include Robert Rauschenberg, Jasper Johns, and Robert Indiana, Reichman said.

The exhibit is jointly sponsored by the Manhattan Arts Council, Kansas Farm Bureau, Union National Bank, the City of Manhattan and the Department of Art.

The K-State permanent art collection has about 1,000 total pieces and is comprised largely of graphic art and paintings, Reichman said. Photography, sculpture, and ceramic artwork make up a smaller portion of the collection.

"The collection is not all stored in one place," she said. "Artworks from the collection are displayed in a number of buildings and offices around campus."

The K-State permanent art collection was established in 1928 by John Helm, a professor in the department of Architecture, and Sandzen, with the collection's focus on Midwestern Helm and colleagues interested in the fine arts, with the support of the University president Dr. Francis Farrell, organized the Friends of Art, a support group which purchased artwork for the permanent collection from yearly membership dues.

"Each year, three to five pieces of artwork are purchased and added to the collection, from a small acquisition bugdet of $4,000 to $5,000," Reichman said.

"The money for the purchase of artwork comes from the Friends of Art and some state funds," she said.

Over the past 60 years, the University collection has received numerous pieces of artwork as gifts, Reich-

Changes expected in Soviet meeting

By The Associated Press

MOSCOW — The Communist Party's policy-making body will meet Friday to overhaul the country's political structure and make high-level leadership changes, Soviet officials said.

The plenary session of the 300-member Central Committee had been expected by October to discuss amendments to the Constitution and expanding elections with multiple candidates.

The changes are key to Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev's goal of taking the 20 millionmember Communist Party out of the day-to-day management of the economy and having it focus on ideology and policy goals.

Research, classes focus on horses

By Mark Rader Collegian Reporter

More than $500 million.

That's what Kansans spend every year to buy, care for and show off some 200,000 horses in the state, said Dennis Sigler, assistant professor in animal sciences and industry.

About 60 of these horses live on campus for research and teaching.

"The animal science horse herd has developed solely from donations of horses, stallions and stallion services. (K-State has) never paid for a horse or a breeding fee," Sigler said.

When Sigler, who specializes in horse research and teaching, was hired in 1979, the herd was composed of four brood mares and some additional horses used for research, he said.

The unit now has 20 brood mares, 12 foals and more than 20 others between the ages of one and three, Sigler said. The unit also has three stallions. One of the stallions is a descendant of Impressive, a nationally recognized show horse.

Sigler said he would normally like to have only 12 to 15 mares at a time, but that number increases when the mares are involved in research which requires more, he said.

The unit has the additional mares because K-State is experimenting with creating full siblings from two different mares.

Kathy Anderson, assistant instructor in animal sciences and industry and manager of the horse unit, is in charge of this project.

The process involves removing an embryo from a donor mare and placing it into a recipient mare that would carry the foal to term. The donor mare is then bred back to the same stallion so the two foals have identical parents, Anderson said.

Nine pairs of full siblings are expected to be delivered in the spring. These animals will then be used in research on different diets and their affect on horses' performance in the industry, she said.

"For every horse we have at the unit, we have to justify its existence for teaching, research or extension use," Sigler said.

Five courses offered in the College of Animal Sciences and Industry deal specifically with horse management and production.

One of these classes, Horse Science, involves the student in the assisting of pregnant mares in the birthing process and the care of the foal immediately following.

Some of the mares in the embryotransfer research will also be used in this class, Anderson said.

Some of the completed projects involving foals dealt with milk production research and several types of feeding trials involving nutrients, growth and intake, Sigler said.

Weanlings and yearlings are used in classes which demonstrate training techniques and practices. Sometimes a horse is assigned to a student for special or further training, Anderson said.

Students in the spring semester can take a reproduction management class in which they learn hands-on techniques in subjects like semen collection and evaluation, artificial insemination and record keeping. These students are also responsible for the breeding of mares which foal in the spring, Anderson said.

Once the horse unit has no further need for a horse in research, it is offered for sale. Sigler said most horses are sold to an individual by private treaty and the rest are sold at a regular horse sale.

Some of the horses are sold to regular customers who keep in contact with the unit, Anderson said. Occasionally students will buy a horse they were responsible for in a class. The horse unit had a sale of their own in 1984, Sigler said.

"We recieved a sizeable donation (of horses) from an individual, plus a fair number of our own which we

"The sale worked really well, we had enough horses and the students were involved in all aspects of it," he

If the unit ever has enough extra horses or can go in with another breeder, it will try to have another sale of its own, Sigler said.

One of Sigler's ambitions for the unit is for sale profits to cover the

"That is kind of unreasonable to expect from a teaching and research facility, but we are not too far off from that now," he said.

Defense bill passes House: Senate next

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - The House on Wednesday voted 369-48 approval of a new Pentagon budget bill shorn of provisions on Star Wars and arms control that had helped attract a presidential veto last month.

President Reagan is likely to sign the bill after the Senate passes it later in the week, said Rep. Les Aspin, D-Wis., chairman of the House Armed Services Committee, and Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee.

The defense authorization measure differs only slightly from the $300 billion package Reagan vetoed Aug. 3.

Both of the Democratic-backed limits were cited by Reagan as among the reasons he rejected the measure.

to offer K-State advice on computers

By Becky Jones Collegian Reporter

A consulting team from EDU-COM, an organization that advises colleges and universities across the nation on how to advance in computer technology, will complete its first visit to K-State on Friday.

The five-member team has been meeting with administration, student groups and various departments on campus since Wednesday.

"They're here to listen to the recommendations, suggestions and observations of various faculty, staff and student groups," said George Miller, vice president for administration and finance.

After the team has gathered information and heard the concerns of various campus groups, it will make specific recommendations with priorities for improvement in the computing field, said Al Keithley, department head of regional community planning and chairman of the academic computing advisory committee.

"What they're aiming for is perhaps a five-year plan," Keithley said. He said the team will be looking at how K-State can meet the computing needs for the common good of the University, as well as individual departments. Keithley said the team will make its recommendations, which will include funding suggestions, in time to implement some of the changes into the next University budget cycle.

Ann Savoie, manager for EDU-COM's consulting and membership services, said more than 550 colleges and universities are members of EDUCOM, and the paperwork is currently underway to make K-State a member.

consulting team visiting K-State from the EDUCOM office.

Keithley said each member of the team has a different perspective, including backgrounds in administrative and academic computing systems, which will help strike a balance in their recommendations. He said they are looking for ways to satisfy the needs of students, faculty and administration - all at a costeffective level.

Keithley said K-State is behind many other colleges and universities in the field of computer technology, Savoie is the only member of the even the smaller institutions close to home, such as Johnson County Community College and Fort Hays State University. He said K-State is near the bottom of the lists in terms of computing power and availability of equipment.

'We're looking to move K-State further into the realm of technology," Keithley said.

A meeting was conducted Wednesday afternoon in the Union for faculty, administrators and students to voice specific concerns and offer ideas to the EDUCOM consulting team. A few issues discussed at the meeting include a lack of student accessibility to computers, not enough printing facilities and a need for coordination and cooperation between departments. Keithley said a major issue the team will be looking into is ways for Farrell Library to offer more on-line search systems, including card cata-

Shuttle launch puts U.S. back in space

By The Associated Press

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. -Space shuttle Discovery carried the American flag back into space Thursday after a 32-month absence, its five astronauts riding a 700-foot tail of flame from rockets meticulously redesigned after the Challenger

"Everyone certainly stood tall today," said Kennedy Space Center director Forrest S. McCartney as Discovery settled into orbit, 184 miles above Earth. Mission Control said the ship was "performing nominally."

Six hours after liftoff the crew accomplished the main mission of its flight, release of a satellite that will give NASA nearly constant communication with future shuttle missions.

It was the first launch since the Challenger explosion, with its toll of seven lives on a cold winter day, shocked the nation and stopped the manned space program in its tracks.

"We sure appreciate your getting us up in orbit the way we should be," Discovery's commander, Navy Capt. Frederick Hauck, told Mission Control. "We're looking forward to the next four days - we have a lot to do and we're going to have a lot of fun

Liftoff was the first and most important milestone, but more was at stake than simply getting into space. The 21/2 -year grounding of the shuttle fleet set back the nation's satellite delivery capability, and release of a communications satellite was the main order of business in orbit, several hours after launch.

The giant Tracking and Data Relay Satellite is a $100-million twin of the craft that was destroyed aboard Challenger.

In Washington, President Reagan praised the launch, saying the shuttle was "headed into orbit and America is back in space." He saluted the ask God to bless this important voyage.

Launch, at 11:37 a.m. EDT, came only after NASA waived weather guidelines to allow for flight through some lighter-than-usual Florida winds. The 98-minute delay simply heightened the tension as NASA unveiled a spaceship that underwent more than 400 modifications since the Challenger flight.

bravery of the crew and added, "We booster rockets performed in their new design awaited detailed analysis. But J.R. Thompson, who directed the work from the Marshall Space Flight Center in Alabama said, "From everything I see, everything looks great." Hauck's veteran flight crew consisted of Air Force Col. Richard Covey, Marine Lt. Col. David C. Hilmers; John M. Lounge; and George D. "Pinky" Nelson. Landing was

Senate passes welfare bill

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - The Senate gave a near unanimous stamp of approval Thursday to the first major welfare overhaul in over half a century, seeking to turn the system into a gate of opportunity rather than a long-term trap.

"For the first time in its halfcentury existence, the U.S. Senate has moved to an entire redefinition and overhaul of what we've come to know as our welfare system," said Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan, D-N.Y., the leader of the effort. The vote on the final version of the Family Welfare Reform Act was 96-1, with Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., the lone opponent. The bill was and from there to the White House, where President Reagan has expressed satisfaction with it.

The hard-won bipartisan compromise, the result of a summer of seesaw negotiations, centers on a large-scale work, education and training program to be aimed primarily at welfare mothers. Support services such as child care would be available to program participants and those moving into low-wage jobs.

Moynihan said that under the revamped system, welfare will "no longer be a permanent or extended condition." Instead, he said, the new system will stress work, child support and last-resort cash supplements, while encouraging the needy to get the education and training headed for House approval Friday needed to avert long-term 12-month period.

dependence.

Sen. Bob Packwood, R-Ore., a key supporter of the drive, said there's no guarantee the bill will work. "But if it does only half of what we hope, it's an immense step forward," he said.

The five-year, $3.3 billion compromise plan is modeled largely on Moynihan's Senate bill, which passed 93-3 in June. Its Job Opportunities and Basic Skills program starts out at $600 million in 1989, rising to $1.3 billion by 1995, when states would have to be serving 20 percent of eligible recipients.

The bill also requires that starting in 1991, all states provide benefits to two-parent unemployed households; only 27 now do so. The other 23 could limit benefits to six months in a

Ethics probe of House Speaker starts partisan name calling

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - House Speaker Jim Wright accused Republicans on Thursday of carrying out a political vendetta against him, but the minority countered that Wright was simply trying to duck charges that he improperly disclosed classified information.

The comments came as angry personal charges flew back and forth between leadership figures of both sides of the political aisle.

"I've never seen this thing get out of control like it is now," said Rep. Tony Coelho, the Democrats' No. 3 leadership official in the chamber. Coelho accused GOP leaders of trying to "tear down the institution" and of caving in to right-wing elements of their party who seek to embarrass

"The relationship between the par-tic counteroffensive a dodge, and He said exchanges were far more acerbic than normal.

Wright, D-Texas, told reporters that GOP efforts to have the ethics committee investigate whether he violated House rules by talking publicly last week about a CIA covert action in Nicaragua are groundless and motivated by politics.

"It is really very sad that people will try to use the ethics committee, or any other committee of the House, as a cat's paw to try to carry out a partisan political vendetta against another member," he said.

"I can take it," Wright said. "As speaker, I'm in the kitchen, and I'm not offering to get out."

MOSCOW - The legislature and the Communist Party's policymaking body will shake up the Kremlin hierarchy in extraordinary meetings this week, a high-level source said Thursday.

The policy-setting Central Committee meets Friday and the Supreme Soviet on Saturday. The meetings brought officials rushing back to Moscow and sparked speculation that Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev and his opponents would face off over his ambitious economic and social reforms.

Soviet sources said there was "no crisis" in the leadership, but the abrupt change in plans of several top Kremlin figures clearly indicated urgent or unexpected business.

Tass reported Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze landed in Moscow Thursday afternoon after cutting short a U.N. visit. Defense Minister Dmitri T. Yazov ended a visit to India a day ahead of schedule. The 1,500-member Supreme Soviet, the nation's parliament, usually convenes twice a year after meetings of the 300-member Central Committee. It last met May 24-26.

Soviet media reported Sunday that a regular session of the Supreme Soviet would begin Oct. 27, and the announcement Thursday of a special sitting at such short notice was highly

The Central Committee had been expected to meet by the end of October, but one Soviet source said plans for implementing Gorbachev's political reforms were proceeding "faster than was expected."

The source, a member of the Central Committee staff, said the committee will approve changes in the party and the structure of government outlined at a party conference in June.

The reforms are intended to enhance the status of the party as the leading force in Soviet society.

The source called it "logical" that personnel changes would follow any change in the organizations' format. He spoke on condition of anonymity.

At its last meeting July 29, the Central Committee adopted a timetable for overhauling the Soviet political system, which also was discussed at the party conference.

That blueprint calls for a new, fulltime legislature and a more powerful president, a post Gorbachev could take on.

The first deadline set was October, by which time the Central Committee said a draft law on amendments to the Soviet Constitution and on multicandidate elections of legislators was to be complete. In a Sept. 23 speech, Gorbachev said the party's 13-member Politburo would convene soon to review the draft law.

Foreign Ministry spokesman Vadim P. Perfiliev told a government news briefing Thursday that the Central Committee plenum "will mark another step in realizing the decisions" of the last party conference. The Central Committee source put the focus on changes in the party's

Soviet sources also reported speculation among high-placed officials about possible changes on the Politburo itself, indicating uncertainty even at high levels about the agenda.

The last full Politburo member removed was Geidar A. Aliev on Oct. 21, 1987. Aliev was a protege of former President Leonid I. Brezhnev, who now is harshly criticized for permitting corruption and stagnation.

The conference of 5,000 Communist Party officials in Moscow three months ago approved plans to limit terms of Communist Party officials and a review of the party's 20 million members.

At that session, one delegate criticized by name President Andrei A. Gromyko, 79, and fellow Politburo member Mikhail S. Solomentsev, 75, linking them to the abuses of the Brezhnev era.

University offers health insurance

By Paul Branson Staff Writer

Health insurance is a fact of life most students don't think about until they need it.

Most students are able to use their parents' insurance policy until they are 21 years old. After that, in some cases, they are on their own.

K-State offers its students a health insurance policy through Blue Cross and Blue Shield of

The semiannual rate for a stu-dent is $225.06, which is the the cheapest rate around, said Dr. Robert Tout, director of Lafene Student Health Center.

This policy will cover half of the post of covered services until the student has paid $500. After that, Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Kansas pays 100 percent of the bill during the 12-month benefit

About 38 percent of the stulents who visit Lafene don't have health insurance, Tout said.

"I think (not having health insurance) is a horrible idea,"
Tout said, adding that with the cost of hospitalization, students can't afford to pay medical bills out of their pockets.

Tout said college students also have a high risk of accidental

"We have quite a few students who are physically active," Tout said. "These students have a higher incidence of injury."

Tougher DUI laws requested

TOPEKA - The Rev. Richard Taylor, president of Kansans for Life at Its Best, enlisted the assistance of members of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Kansas Thursday in his campaign to get Kansas to lower the blood alcohol level at which a person is legally drunk.

Delivering the keynote address at the 110th annual state convention of the WCTU, Taylor urged members to put pressure on their legislators and legislative candidates to support lowering the alcohol content level from .10 percent to .05 percent. No state presently has a standard that low.

He asked WCTU members to write or contact their legislators and legislative candidates asking them before the election on Nov. 8 if they will support lowering the level.

"Kansas law says nothing about being drunk. Driving under the influence of alcohol is the issue," Taylor told the WCTU delegates at Grace United Methodist Church.

"Kansas law says nothing about drunk driving. Driving under the influence of alcohol is what the law addresses.

"We never said .05 should be listed as driving drunk. No person will ever admit to being drunk. But driving under the influence is something no one can deny if they have had even one drink and do not wait one hour before driving,"

Reformatory 'overcrowded'

TOPEKA - An attorney for the inmates at the Kansas State Industrial Reformatory in Hutchinson asked a federal judge Thursday to order the state to remove more than 900 prisoners from the prison because of overcrowded conditions.

Dwight Corrin of Wichita filed a formal motion for relief on behalf of the inmates in a pending prison overcrowding lawsuit initiated by inmates in the Kansas State Penitentiary at Lansing.

The inmates want U.S. District Judge Richard Rogers of Topeka to order the removal of 100 inmates a month. They also want the judge to prevent the state from admitting new inmates to the reformatory and to require state officials to develop a plan for improving conditions there.

Three weeks ago, Rogers allowed the reformatory inmates and inmates from a third prison, the Kansas Correctional Institution at Lansing, to become parties to the penitentiary overcrowding lawsuit. Further hearings in the case are scheduled for Oct. 24 and could last three days.

"Basically, what we want them to do is get down to singleman cells," Corrin said.

Officials argue about prisons

TOPEKA - Gov. Mike Hayden and Corrections Secretary Roger Endell may disagree on Endell's proposal for the construction of two new state prisons at a cost of up to $107.8

Hayden has yet to publicly sign off on the plan, and he expressed lukewarm support for it Thursday. Endell also acknowleged that he and the governor have not discussed the proposal, which is expected to be one of the most controversial to face the 1989 Legislature.

In addition, Endell has generally criticized an idea Hayden advanced Thursday - starting only part of the construction and completing the remainder later. Endell wants to start the entire project immediately.

Endell and other corrections officials outlined the secretary's plan Thursday in an informal hearing before U.S. District Judge Richard Rogers of Topeka, who has jurisdiction in a pending prison overcrowding lawsuit.

Under it, the state would build two 752-bed prisons, one costing $55.2 million and the second $52.6 million.

U.S. sponsors space station

WASHINGTON - The United States and 11 allied countries signed an agreement Thursday to build a $23 billion permanently manned space station designed to serve as a stepping-stone for human exploration of the solar system.

The facility, known as Space Station Freedom, will be designed, developed, operated and used by all of the partners, which include nine European allies, Japan and Canada, in addition to the United States.

The United States is providing $16 billion to the program and the other partners are contributing more than $7 billion. The agreement was formalized at a State Department signing ceremony at which Secretary of State George P. Shultz presided.

Richard Smith, a State Department scientist, told reporters the project is "clearly the world's largest ever international venture and certainly one of the most complex."

Margaret Finarelli, an official of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, said the Europeans countries, all members of the European Space Agency, will contribute $4.2 billion to the project, Japan $2 billion and Canada $1 billion.

Students offered $2 tickets

K-State football fans are being offered $2 general admission tickets for Saturday's Homecoming game against Louisiana

The special-priced tickets will be available at the stadium entrances from 11:30 a.m. to 12:45 p.m. only, said Carol Duerfeldt, ticket office assistant.

"We're doing this just to be nice," Duerfeldt said. The Wildcats will battle Lousiana Tech, with kickoff scheduled for 1 p.m. on Saturday.

There are still reserved seats available through the ticket office which will be sold at regular prices, Duerfeldt said. Homecoming activities will culminate at halftime when the 1988-89 K-State Ambassadors and the Homecoming competition winners are announced.

Donations sought for memorial

The Arnold Air Society and the Vietnam Memorial Committee are joining during Saturday's Homecoming football game to raise money for the proposed K-State Vietnam Memorial.

"Operation Combat Boot" was conducted last year and raised over $1,000 during the K-State vs. Army football game. Members of the Vietnam Memorial Committee and Arnold Air Society, carrying combat boots, will be accepting donations before the game near the entrances to the stadium.

A site dedication for the memorial is tentatively planned for Nov. 11.

Beach Boys' successes results of hard work, personal sacrifice

By Judd Annis Collegian Reviewer

Although their songs don't reflect it, The Beach Boys' road to success has been long and rocky.

Founded in 1961 by brothers Brian, Carl and Dennis Wilson, cousin Mike Love and neighborhood chum Al Jardine, the popularizers of "surf music" have had a rollercoaster career.

Their first hit, "Surfin," brought them regional attention in California in early 1962.

This exposure landed them a contract with a major label and their first national hit, "Surfin' Safari," that same year.

The Beach Boys essentially bridged the gap between the rock 'n' roll of the '50s and the British invasion of the early '60s.

Armed with their sound and the message of carefree sun, surf and sand, they related to American teenagers with songs about cars, racing, the West Coast and girls.

This mixture propelled the group to stardom with numerous hits, including three number-one records: "I Get Around." "Help Me Rhonda." and "Good Vibrations."

While producing successful records brought fame and fortune, The Beach Boys and co-founder Brian Wilson also have gained notoriety and respect as accomplished musical minds.

fresh sound in a time when many the record store. artists were recording songs written by professional musicians. Much of this freshness is credited to Brian Wilson's songwriting abilities, his creative production techniques and his use of falsetto vocals.

All of this combined to make The Beach Boys one of the most successful groups in America and possibly the first self-produced rock group. Between 1962 and 1965, during the height of their popularity, The Beach Boys bombarded the pop charts with one smash after another, including "Surfer Girl," "Little Deuce Coupe," "Be True to Your School," and "Fun, Fun, Fun."

What had blossomed into an incredible career, however, soon began to take its toll on the group, and especially Brian. After suffering a nervous breakdown in 1965, Brian announced his plans to cease touring with the group. While the rest of the band continued to tour, Brian completed "California Girls" and started work on the epic album, "Pet

"Pet Sounds," although touted as one of Brian's greatest musical achievements and hailed by Paul McCartney as a major influence on the Beatles' "Sgt. Pepper's Lonely

The group established itself with a Hearts Club Band" album, flopped at

Soon after, "Good Vibrations," the most costly and painstakingly produced single of that time, ($16,000 and 90 studio hours), sold more than a million copies.

This success, however, was no comfort to Brian, who saw the failure of "Pet Sounds" and the huge success of "Sgt. Pepper's" as evidence that he had lost the popular-music battle and was no longer in the driver's seat of American pop.

Whether these fears were wellfounded or not, Brian slipped into seclusion and became bitterly disillusioned.

Personal and family problems plagued several of the band members, while several embarked on solo careers.

In 1983, Dennis Wilson died in a swimming accident and Brian admitted himself for help with a drug problem. In 1984, Brian placed himself under the 24-hour supervision of a Los Angeles psychologist, who put him on a road to recovery.

Today, The Beach Boys continue to be a popular concert attraction around the United States, playing what may be thought of today as an oldies set to a loyal following.

Students of yesteryear were human too

riginally I had planned on using this space to air my views on our school song which few undergraduates can recite, much less sing (except for the last line "Hail, hail, hail alma mater").

After researching the topic at the University archives and thumbing through a Royal Purple from 1916 to read about K-State's first Homecoming (which took place in 1915), I came to an astounding conclusion.

Those stemed-faced students of 72 years ago were a lot like the students of today. OK, they didn't have Nintendo games, air conditioning, computers or access to those crazy Xerox copiers, but they had the registration ritual, stomach-wrenching exams and, of course, a new class of freshmen every year.

Up until now, I had imagined people "back then" in black-and-white and never conceived that those stoic faces could ever crack a smile, feel frustration during enrollment or sweat through an exam. It was such a simple concept, yet I never picked up on it. Students of the "back then" era complained and laughed at the daily hassles of college life just as students of today do. It's all part of dealing with the curve balls of college.

Take this piece out of the Royal Purple on the registration process of 1916:

"This painful, but necessary step or rather standstill, takes place in the gym. First the powers that be, divide the sheep from the goats — the upper classmen enter at the right-hand door and the under classmen at the left - that is, they attempt to enter. As a rule, all are compelled to stand in line for an hour or two before they are really admitted. Presumably this is to take away all inborn ideas of personal liberty and make the student properly submissive.

Immediately upon entering, he must write down his measles, mumps, chicken pox and even his age. This is also very subduing, and by the time the student reaches the main floor of the gym, he hands his money over to the registrar without a murmur."

Besides moving from what used to be Nichols Gymnasium (now Nichols Hall) to Ahearn Field House, it doesn't sound like registration has changed all that much. At The '18 class, however, revived the custom least the students of 1988 can use credit and in the spring of '15, little purple caps cards. Yes indeed, the registration process can still evoke a wave of bureaucratic bagging. Gee Beav, I guess all that radical stuff didn't start in the 1960s after all ...

Now, some 72-year-old thoughts on fresh-a paddle.

... In order to assist the freshman laddies' memories, the paddle is brought into play. ... Paddling suffices to make most of them see reason. "Say! They are paddling the capless freshies down in Aggieville. Got your paddle? Come on!"

Let's hear it for bringing back the traditional freshman cap! Just kidding, kids. Forcing freshmen to wear a purple and white beanie every Tuesday and Thursday is a bit much. And in the age of "The People's Court," paddling non-conforming freshmen could result in a lawsuit. But hey, let's keep honoring that long-standing tradition of going to Aggieville.

A 1916 student's view of exams:

"Wouldn't you like to go to college if you didn't have to study? One senior remarked that was her idea of heaven - college life with all its fun and frolic, but without the everlasting feeling she had to study and get ready for EXAMS.

It is rumored that by studying hard all I think of thee alma mater. term, students may receive exemptions from KSU we'll carry thy banner high their finals. of the freshmen object, and thereby hangs - any good to study - the prof will be sure to ask something you do not know, anyhow. Studying is a mere formality to ease the conscience, so that when you receive your yellow flunk slip you can say: "It was all the prof s fault. I did my part. I studied."

For the good of the underclassmen, lest they be led astray by our words of wisdom, we give the following warning:

'And so he never studied or stayed up late to cram, or got the blues or worried-but he flunked in his exam."

Who would have thought that the K-State students of 1916 were pulling all-nighters or blaming a low test score on their professor. And I thought they had values back then ...

Happy Homecoming, K-State! And for those of you who find yourself mumbling through our alma mater, here are the words. (Tape them onto your mirror or something):

George Bush would like a "kinder nation," and one way to achieve that would be to surround himself with honest and ethical advisers. But, if a look at his campaign staff is a good indication of what his cabinet will look like, he seems determined to create a sleazier nation, instead of a kinder one.

Bush has often boasted that he has served as head of the White House Task Force on Drugs. But, he has failed to mention that his campaign staff has its own task force on drugs. Stuart K., Spencer, head of the Quayle division of the campaign, worked as a lobbyist (salary $350,000) for Panamanian General Manuel Noriega of Panama. Spencer lobbied against congressional investigations of Noriega for drug dealing and the murder of

Sleaze would remain if Bush wins election

The so-called "sleaze factor" will certainly go down in history as one of the most enduring qualities of the Reagan administration. #### Collegian Editorial Policies

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR are always encouraged. Those which pertain to matters of campus and/or public interest are especially encouraged, and are given the highest priority.

Letters should be kept as brief as possible, preferably under 300 words. Those who cannot condense their opinions should consider submitting their letter in the form of a guest column. All letters are subject to editing for space, style and taste.

GUEST COLUMNS are also encouraged. The column should be no longer than two double-spaced, typed pages. If the submission is used as a column and not a letter to the editor, it will be accompanied by the author's photograph. SEND SUBMISSIONS to the Collegian in Kedzie 116.

BUDALLI NELOS

Editor,

This is written in response to the photograph which appeared on the sports page in the Sept. 22 issue.

I'd like to congratulate the Wildcat football program for its originality. I mean, who else would think of posing with beef carcasses for a compositional comparison? What a great diversional tactic!

Sorry to disappoint those of you who actually thought creativity lurked in the minds of the football team, but the credit belongs to the Emporia State University football program whose fall football schedule poster depicts team members and beef carcasses of prime

Course in place

I agree with Sheikh Faisal Razzaq in his Sept. 28 column that there is a critical need for the type of orientation program that he describes. In fact, K-State is in its second year of offering such a credit/no credit course, with a current enrollment of 350 students. I invite Mr. Razzaq to stop by the Academic Assistance Center, Union 108, to pick up a copy of our course syllabus, and he will find that our Freshman Orientation Seminar does all he suggests and more.

One of the primary goals of this full semester course is to acquaint new students with the University and the many resources that are available to them. Staff persons from University Counseling Services, Dean of Student Life's Office, Academic Assistance Center, Lafene Student Health, Farrell Library, Women's Crisis Center and Student Financial Assistance give informative presentations on a variety of topics. Advisers from the various colleges work with their majors on issues such as course selection and preparing for careers. Student Government representatives talk to each class about the importance of becoming involved. Assignments are designed to acquaint students with campus services, the library, and career opportunities in their majors. Students are also required to attend various campus cultural events and for discussions about personal issues such as relationships, alcohol and drug awareness, birth control, sexually transmitted disease and acquaintance rape. Instructors also work with their classes on goal setting, time management and academic skill development.

Nine of the 11 instructors of the Freshman Orientation Seminar are University faculty, and staff who volunteer their time with no additional compensation. Student evaluations of the course have been very positive, and we hope to continue to be able to offer this important service to our new students.

Spend money better

Editor,

When I read the article in Friday's paper that contained Bernie Giefer's proposal to add a $12.50 fee to undergraduate tuition with the proceeds going to the athletic department, I was appalled. To me it is a classic case of stealing from the poor and giving to the rich. The football coaching staff by itself has a combined annual salary of $397,860 and from what I've seen of the football team this season, neither the players nor the University are getting their money's worth. That salary figure is equivalent to 13 faculty positions at $30,000 per 12-month appointment which is roughly the number of faculty positions the administration is proposing to eliminate. I am concerned with both the cost and the quality of my education, and with his proposal, Giefer fails to represent me on both counts.

When employers look to hire college graduates they are much more concerned with the quality of education they have received than they are with the quality of their athletic program, and that concern is reflected in more and better offers to those graduates of schools with strong academics. If the Student Senate wants to do something that will help the students well into their careers, it should work to bolster the level of instruction we pay to receive.

Speaker left out

I'm surprised that no one on the Collegian staff has corrected the disappointing omission from Friday's article about the last preconvocation forum. There were four participants, but your story names and characterizes the presentations of only three. Not even in your follow-up comments on Tuesday did you mention this "mystery participant."

Antonia Pigno's remarks on Coronado as a literary goldmine were perfectly delightful, as the warm applause she received most certainly indicated. She deserves public recognition.

Firing requested

Editor,

The residents of the basement of Goodnow Hall would like to know the answer to this week's question. How can a man with these qualifications still have — or ever get — a

A look at Stan Parrish's resume that is likely to be made when he gets fired (can't come soon enough) strengthens the question.

NAME: Stan Parrish OCCUPATION: Football Coach?

ACHIEVEMENTS: IN TWO YEARS PLUS THREE GAMES

OF COACHING FOOTBALL AT KANSAS STATE, I HAVE COMPILED THE FOL-LOWING STATISTICS:

My record is 2-22-1, but hey, I kicked the tar out of Division 9 Western Illinois 35-7, beat Big Eight power house KU 29-19 and tied them once 17-17. Also, in two meetings with lame Oklahoma and Nebraska, I've only been outscored 209-23 and have yet to give up 100 points to either team.

So what if we lost to Division 17 Austin Peay. You didn't see us break dance at midfield when we beat Division 9 Western Illinois or when we held Nebraska to a measly eight touchdowns.

So what if we have been outscored 522-131 in 14 Big Eight games. That's an average score of 37-9. I have only been outscored 342-171 in 11 non-conference games, which is an average score of 31-16 so HA!

It's a crying shame that our beloved Coach Parrish is still here. We've actually got some good football players, but the man at the helm isn't worth a darn.

Entrepreneurial Center to aid in cutting business overhead

By Chris Koger Collegian Reporter

New businesses in the Manhattan area will soon have help in cutting overhead costs. The Kansas Entrepreneurial Center, housed in the Southwestern Bell building on Fairchild Avenue, is scheduled to open Monday.

The research-based center, or more commonly known in the business world as an "incubator," offers low-rent office and conference space and secretarial support with the primary goal of "providing jobs for the Manhattan area," said John Walters, KEC president and executive vice president of the K-State Research Foundation.

"The incubator will lower overhead costs, as well as help businesses with ideas and their business plans,"

The center will be operated by a board made up of K-State, Manhat-

The K-State chapter of the Association of Collegiate Entrepreneurs plans to rent office space in the incubator for its organization.

"This type of facility will benefit all who are involved in ACE," said Mark A. Davis, ACE president and junior in agricultural economics. "We'll have a free exchange of business information. We'll be with people who have the same ideas, while giving us 'real world' experience."

Walters said that although the center is designed for establishing new businesses, he is "impressed at ACE's enthusiasm."

"This is a little unusual, as incubators are for people already out in the working world," Walters said. "But the people who are in ACE today have ideas about starting businesses, and in this setting, they are sure to get more ideas. The board was impressed with their interest and enthusiasm about the project."

Of the about 40 ACE members, only a handful plan to use it at first, Davis said.

"With the incubator, we'll have the space and opportunity to sit and toss ideas around. We won't have to worry about where we will meet next," said David Metcalf, former ACE president.

Art festival reflects 16th century

By Angela J. Smith Collegian Reporter

Visitors walking through the gates of the Renaissance Festival in Bonner Springs may feel they are traveling through a time machine. Once out of the dusty parking lot, they are in a 16th-century English village in the midst of its harvest celebration.

This is the 12th year for the Renaissance Festival, which provides financial support for the Kansas City Art Institute.

The weekend celebration began on Sept. 3, and by the time it closes on Oct. 16, Renaissance officials predict that 150,000 persons will have visited the village. The festival opens every year on Labor Day weekend.

The festival includes permanent hut-like buildings, which line the winding streets and provide space for merchants to sale crafts.

Most of the crafts for sale are similar to the ones made in the 16th century. The crafts range from the products of wood carving and wheat weaving to an authenic replica of an apple press, churning out cider.

'It's not your average everyday fair. It is different; you can actually see demonstrations of the crafts done in the 16th century," said Kris Eisenhower, advertising director for the

Many people are drawn to the festival for the entertainment, she said. The 15 stages provide entertainment ranging from raucous and risque comedy to authentically-armed knights, clashing in battle.

Eisenhower said all of the entertainers wear elaborate costumes, which are as authenic as possible. The entertainers are selected from a series of tryouts conducted in the spring and summer.

One of the new acts is "The Royal Falconer." Eagles, hawks, owls and falcons are featured in this educational act, which is presented by the Rapto Rehabilitation and Propagation Project.

Another new attraction is the "Great American Rainbow Gypsy Theatre." The performers combine music, dance and storytelling with vaudeville antics to enact a 16thcentury gypsy camp.

"The Renaissance Downs," another feature of the festival, is an act with actual jousting matches, with armored riders charging toward the center of the arena to battle with opponents. Between jousts, comedians entertain the crowd.

"The downs is one of our most popular acts," Eisenhower said. "People flock to see the jousts."

In addition to the entertainment on stage, there are minstrels, musicians, dancers and period characters who mingle with the crowd.

The Rat Lady has captured the attention of many visitors. The filthy-dressed hag has a necklace of fake rats and offers free kisses to males, promising a "kiss will prevent the plague."

The king's executioner, masked and carrying an ax, wanders through the crowd, looking for his next

"The actors who walk around the festival make the Renaissance period come alive," said Mauria Stonestreet, senior in advertising, who attended the festival. All the costumed characters are taught by festival officials to speak in a 16th-century dialect.

There are also periodic parades through the festival grounds. The royal court - including the king, queen, soldiers, jesters and cabinet members - is introduced by trumpeters as it winds through the grounds, greeting visitors.

A variety of foods is served at the festival, including Scotch eggs hard-boiled eggs wrapped in sausage. There are also baked potatoes topped with cheese and barbecued turkey drumsticks. The festival has a special permit to sell beer on

"We have modern food, but it is cooked on the grill and seasoned like (food from) the era," Eisenhower who might ask that same question several times during their college years, without ever knowing the answer.

Admission is $8.95 for adults and $3.95 for children. Advanced tickets are $7.95. Tickets may also be purchased at the gate.

Excluding the two new metal sculptures south of McCain, which were donated last spring by the Price R. and Flora Reid Foundation of Wichita, the majority of the art on campus was created by students, beginning in the summer of 1969.

In 1969, '70 and '71, summer workshops in art set out to do projects for K-State.

These summer workshops were funded by the Ford Foundation and K-State in an attempt to combine the efforts of art, architecture and engineering students.

Some of the most conversational pieces on the K-State campus came out of these workshops.

"The fork," as it is referred to by most students, is possibly the most curious sculpture at K-State.

Located outside King Hall, the "fork" is technically a 20-foot sculpture made out of plastic.

Created by James Wentz, a student in the 1969 workshop, this sculpture has unintentionally become one of the most controversial. Since its creation, many students have written about the sculpture and its meaning.

The untitled concrete sculpture in front of Denison Hall is another of the more popular artworks on Interpreting the sculpture has caused confusion for many students. Created in 1969 by student Nick Zack, the concrete structure weighs 19 tons and has been worth its weight

However, not all of the summer workshop projects have stood the test of time.

Several banners made by students On warm days, students can often no longer exist, and some of the outdoor seating areas that were created, such as the area in front of the Union, have been restructured.

However, the structures and artwork that do remain have become functional for the students and have created an environment of interaction between the students and the art. As the curator of the K-State art collection, Jessica Reichman views the art on campus as a success if the students interact with it. "If the art evokes any emotion, ceeded," Reichman said.

The students rolling snowballs against the King Hall sculpture and students reading in the hole of the Denison Hall sculpture are examples of students interacting with the artwork, Reichman said.

Interaction is not the only strength of art, said John Vogt, associate professor of art. The strength of most art doesn't lie in a story that can be told in words.

The major artworks on campus are not entitled, leaving the interpretation up to the viewer. Artists might not title their artwork so as not to hinder the opinion and reaction of the viewer, Vogt said. And for sculptures, if the impact cannot be done visually, it shouldn't be done at all.

While all of these artworks might enhance the campus in their own unique ways, "They are not permanent pieces of the official K-State art collection," Reichman said.

However, the placing of the art into the permanent collection is a process hoped for in the future.

"The only sculptures which are currently a part of the K-State art collection would be those near McCain." These donated sculptures do have names, and perhaps are a good example of why curious students might not want all the sculptures named. The first sculpture is titled Kreqe-Aekyad and the second is titled Kgrefe-Aekyad, Reichman said. While the pronunciation of these names might be anyone's guess, the meaning is also such, which proves that the naming of a sculpture by an artist in no means helps the interpre-

The Department of Music is trying to keep up with increasing demand for jazz music by adding a faculty member to deal directly with jazz performance and education.

Realizing the growing importance of jazz in music education, the Department of Music hired Ben Rohrer, assistant band director, who began work this semester as the coordinator of jazz ensembles.

Adding a coordinator for the program was a wise investment, "particularly since jazz is America's art form," Rohrer said.

The University also recognizes the importance of attracting new musicians by adding programs, Rohrer said. Also, the National Association of Jazz Educators is based in Manhattan, giving K-State even more attention from potential students.

"I think that attracts kids here," Rohrer said. Many beginning musicians and students in majors other than music enroll in a course titled Jazz Instrumental Ensemble. While other jazz courses offered in the department some students inquire about it deal with highly structured music, Rohrer teaches Jazz Instrumental Ensemble as an improvisational

"The essence of the jazz style is improvisational and basically that's what this course is," he said.

Although this course was offered in previous semesters, it has always been more loosely organized than it is this semester, Rohrer said.

"Basically it needed to fit my style of teaching. I think we've still captured the essence of the jam session," Rohrer said.

Students can learn a lot from a jam session, he said, but with an instructor's help, they can be shown errors and corrections right on the spot.

Another way Rohrer's students learn from the improvisational jam sessions is through the experience of more advanced musicians. "It's an interesting class because there tends to be an awful lot of folks who are not enrolled in the class, but come along and play," he said. The musicians learn about the

Haskell president investigated on conflict of interest charge

By The Associated Press

LAWRENCE - The president of Haskell Indian Junior College is under investigation by the Bureau of Indian Affairs for an alleged conflict of interest, a bureau spokesman said.

Gerald E. Gipp, president of the two-year college since January 1981, also is under fire by the United Indian Tribes of Western Oklahoma and Kansas, which has called for his removal.

The alleged conflict of interest accuses Gipp of ordering that a grade given to his daughter, Denise, be changed so that she could graduate with an associate's degree in secretarial science on May 10, 1987, according to Calvin Dailey of Seminole, Okla.

An "F" in a records management class, a required course for Gipp's graduation, was allegedly changed to a "D," said Dailey, vice president of the National Haskell Board of Regents. Dailey was elected to that post by the United Indian Tribes.

Denise Gipp declined to comment Wednesday.

1ST Anniversary

Speaking on Gerald Gipp's behalf, Charles Geboe, dean of instruction at Haskell, said that bureau officials had instructed school administrators, including Gipp, not to comment about the investigation until the bureau investigator completes his report. The investigator from Washington, D.C., spent one day on campus last week, Geboe said.

Carl Shaw, director of public relations for the bureau in Washington, confirmed that the agency was investigating a conflict-of-interest complaint.

Will the 'Cats finally say I do to a win?

Watson to start for K-State after missing first 3 games

By Chris Wilhelm Sports Writer

The way coach Stan Parrish sees it, K-State's football team is a bride that was left at the altar.

"We got to the altar two weeks ago against Tulane but the ceremony didn't come off," coach Stan Parrish

The Wildcats will take on the Louisiana Tech Bulldogs at 1:30 p.m. Saturday at KSU Stadium. The Bulldogs, 1-3, are coming off their first victory of the season, a 31-10 thrashing of Nicholls State.

K-State, 0-3, hasn't played in two weeks following its 20-16 loss to

One factor in K-State's favor is it has the preseason choice for starting quarterback, Paul Watson, at the helm. Watson, who suffered a severe shoulder injury, sat out K-State's first three games.

"I feel ready to play," Watson said. "I feel just as ready as I did before the first game. I would rather go out and play at 110 percent than play at 80 percent and worry about hurting my shoulder again. If I hurt it, I hurt it. There is nothing I can do about it."

"(Watson) has had a good week of practice. There's no question that he's at 100 percent physically," Parrish said.

"The week off will help more than it will hurt," Parrish said. The team has had a chance to mentally prepare for the Bulldogs as well as taking care of any nagging injuries the players might have had.

"When you have a tough loss, (the layoff) allows you to regroup a little bit mentally," Parrish said. "Physically we weren't in good shape either. It gives the kids some down

"I think the layoff helped us. (Lee) Pickett's toe was hurting him quite a bit last week. If we had played last Saturday he would have been questionable but he'll be ready to play Saturday. Maurice Henry hurt his Achilles tendon in practice, but he'll be ready to go also."

Saturday is also Homecoming for K-State which has Louisiana Tech coach Joe Peace a little worried.

"I expect them to be up for this game like we were a week ago for our game," Peace said. "We went in 0-3 and needing a win and that's where K-State is at right now. Saturday is their Homecoming and I'm sure they'll be up for us."

K-State averages 324.7 yards per game on offense while the Bulldogs averege 224.8 yards per contest. On defense, the 'Cats have given up 393 yards per contest while the Bulldogs have allowed their opponents 445.

Prior to the Bulldogs' last game, they had only scored 20 points to their opponents 119 and had not scored a touchdown in 12 quarters.

"The week off will help more than it will hurt." -Stan Parrish.

football coach

"(K-State's defense) puts a tremendous amount of pressure on the quarterback, especially a passing quarterback," Peace said. "We know that they'll do that because they are very quick defensively. Offensively they have a very versatile quarterback that they can do a lot with.

"Defensively, I think we'll come out very aggressive against them. Offensively we've been struggling lately so I'm hoping the victory has us moving in the right direction."

its best football of the season two weeks ago only to lose to the Tulane Green Wave with less than a minute left in the game.

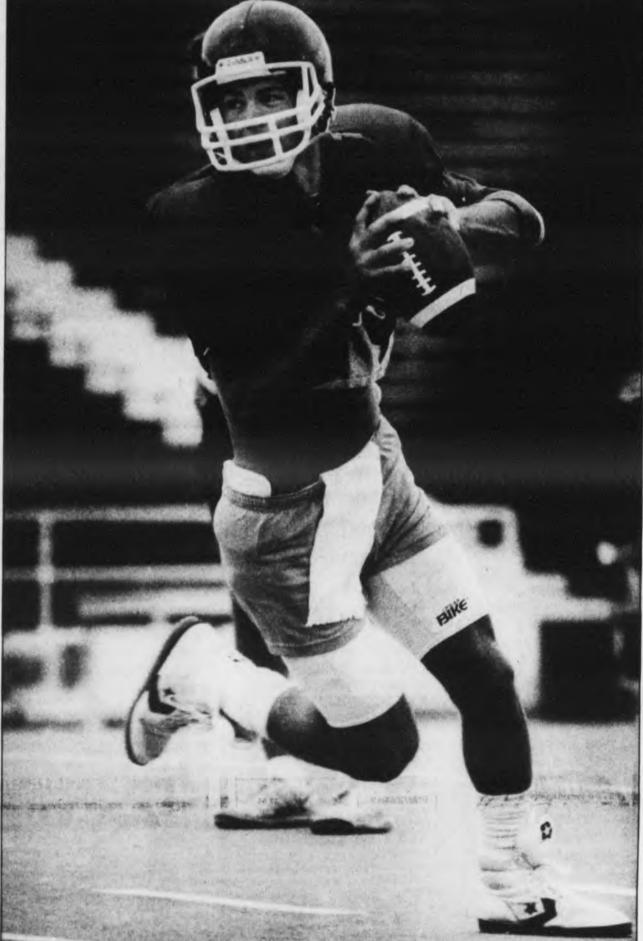

"We're learning how to win and that takes a little time," Parrish said. "We weren't in the first game (against Tulsa). We were in the second game for the whole first half (against Iowa). We were in the third game for 58 minutes. We just need to play a whole game well and we will be where we want to be.

"Our defense is looking really good. Except for the last two minutes of the Tulane game that was the best defense we've played in three years. It's also the first time in six or eight years that our offense has gained over 350 yards in back to back games."

Another segment of the Wildcats that has impressed Parrish is his specialty teams.

"Mark Porter has been just excellent for us," Parrish said. "The rest of our specialty teams have also improved significantly. While (punter) Shane Pouch doesn't have an overly strong leg, he has worked on getting the ball off much quicker and he hasn't had any blocked punts this

"The older guys who are on most of the specialty teams are the glue that hold the groups together. Rob Easterwood, Jeff Lowe and Randy Koch have been doing outstanding K-State, on the other hand, played jobs for us on our specialty units.

Redshirt-freshman Paul Watson drops back for a pass during Thursday afternoon's football practice. After injuring his shoulder in the preseason, Watson is preparing for his first collegiate start on Saturday.

Wildcats to play Cyclones

By The Collegian Staff

At the beginning of the 1988 volleyball season, K-State streaked to an 8-0 start.

The Wildcats can only hope the beginning of the Big Eight Conference season means just as much success.

K-State opens Big Eight play tonight at Ames, Iowa, against the Iowa State Cyclones. Saturday, the Wildcats will travel to Des Moines to battle Drake University.

Iowa State, a third-place finisher in the regular season race a year ago, is 8-5.

K-State, now 8-4 after Tuesday's three-game loss to Wichita State University, finished fourth in the league race last year. The 'Cats have won only one game in the last four matches.

Iowa State, 1-0 in the Big Eight Conference, defeated the University of Kansas Saturday 15-3, 15-5, 16-14. The Cyclones swept the Wildcats a year ago, winning in three games in Ames, and in four games in Manhattan.

'This will be a tough match for us," Coach Scott Nelson said. "We have got to play to our strengths to be able to win."

In their last outing at Wichita State, the 'Cats watched the Shockers convert .346 of their attack opportunities. Nelson also pointed out that WSU led ■ See 'CATS, Page 10

Reynolds watches brother win silver medal in Seoul

By Melissa Paul Collegian Reporter

Jeff Reynolds, senior in social sciences, has followed Butch Reynolds' career from the beginning. Jeff can recall almost anything about the track star who won a silver medal in the 400-meter dash Tuesday in Seoul, South Korea, at the Summer Olympic Games,

In fact, Jeff could probably tell secrets about Butch that even Butch's mother doesn't know.

Jeff can do this because he and name, they are brothers.

Jeff could say only one thing about on my back." his older brother's second-place finish Tuesday night: "Great."

Butch Reynolds made his name famous this summer when he broke the 400-meter world record - a record which had stood for 20 years. But, Jeff Reynolds' name isn't exactly unknown.

Jeff was the 400-meter Big Eight Conference champion in 1987 and 1988. He finished seventh in a NCAA meet and achieved his career best of 45.87 at the U.S. Olympic Trials.

Jeff transferred to K-State after attending two years at Butler County Community College, where his brother also attended. Butch returned to Ohio and ran for Ohio State University.

In high school, the Reynolds brothers would finish one-two in the 400-meter dash.

"Ten times out of 10, he took first," Jeff said. "(But) I don't mind as long as it's kept in the family."

This past summer, Jeff trained and ran with his brother on the international circuit ran my first race in Scotland, I saw all sonal services. In Columbus, he will those people and got really nervous. Now I don't look," Jeff said.

In the meet in Zurich, after his brother broke the world record, Jeff said it was strange to hear the crowd chanting "Reynolds, Reynolds," because most of the people couldn't even speak English.

Jeff is waiting to begin his track practice. Because he ran all summer, he has taken the beginning of the practice period to rest and revitalize his body.

"For this year, my goal is to make Butch not only have the same last the World University Games," he said. "Then I'll be able to wear USA

In May, Jeff will graduate and move to Columbus, Ohio, with his fiancee, Felicia Curry, graduate student in student counseling and perstart his career and train with his brother.

After learning so much this summer, Jeff said he has come back more dedicated. "Now when I go out, I know what I need to do to get the job done," he said.

Jeff also plans to make the 1992

Olympic team. "I have aspirations like my brother's, but they will be my aspirations," he said. "I want them to know us as Jeff and Butch and then match

Jeff said he wishes he was in Seoul, but it would have meant taking a semester off school.

"I think it's good I'm here continuing my education," he said.

Jeff Reynolds hopes to match or surpass the performance of his "I learned a lot in Europe, When I brother, Butch, who won a silver medal in the Olympic 400-meter dash.

Basketball plans announced

The K-State men's basketball team has scheduled its annual Midnight Madness basketball practice, as well as another intrasquad scrimmage and two preseason exhibition games.

Midnight Madness will be Oct. 14 with the actual practice scheduled to begin at 12:01 a.m., on the the 15th. A list of activities for that evening will be released once details have been finalized.

On Nov. 5, the Wildcats will travel to McPherson for an intrasquad scrimmage. The scrimmage, which will be a homecoming for K-State guard Steve Henson, is set for 7:30 p.m., at McPherson High School.

The exhibition slate begins on Nov. 9 when the 'Cats play Athletes In Action. That game will be played in Bramlage Coliseum, beginning at 7:30 p.m.

The final preseason tune-up is scheduled for Nov. 18 when the Danish National Team will be in Manhattan. That game is also set for a 7:30 p.m. start. Ticket information on the two exhibition games will be made available as those games draw nearer. The first regular season game will be played on Nov. 26 with K-State hosting the Purdue Boilermakers.

Hershiser breaks record

SAN DIEGO - The consecutive scoreless inning record was there for Orel Hershiser to take, but the Los Angeles Dodgers right-hander had to be forced to take it.

"I really didn't want to break it," said Hershiser, who pitched 10 shutout innings against the San Diego Padres Wednesday night to extend his scoreless inning streak to 59, one inning better than former Dodger great Don Drysdale's mark.

Okoye returns to practice

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - Guard Byron Ingram, who started the season's first four games for the Kansas City Chiefs, was placed on injured reserve Wednesday because of an ankle sprain suffered last weekend against San Diego.

Meanwhile, two Chiefs' running backs returned to practice Wednesday for the first time since the start of the regular season and are expected to be ready for uction Sunday.

Fullback Christian Okoye, the Chiefs' leading rusher last year, said Wednesday that he still has pain in a thumb that he broke in the first preseason game in August. Herman Heard, the team's second leading rusher last season, suffered a separted shoulder in the final preseason game. He's likely to return as a backup to Paul Palmer.

Students choose ambassadors

Perkins, Valentine to represent K-State

By Christina Doherty Collegian Reporter

The announcement of the 1989 K-State Ambassadors highlighted the halftime show Saturday afternoon at the K-State football game. Kate Perkins, junior in animal science, and Mike Valentine, junior in industrial engineering, were selected as the new ambassadors.

Perkins and Valentine were selected from a group of seven student candidates by the student body during voting in the Union last week. Each ambassador will receive a $1,500 scholarship from the KSU Alumni Foundation. Their duties include assisting in recruitment efforts and representing students at University engagements.

Perkins and Valentine said they each have their own goals for their year-long term.

"The main thing I want to accomplish is to bridge the gap between prospective students, alumni and K-State," Valentine said.

"I'm really excited to promote Kansas State University. I'm excited to reach out to the public and share K-State with them," Per-

Also announced at halftime were the results of the float competition and team winners in the overall Homecoming competition.

Parrish, Miller to meet today, decide future

By The Collegian Staff

K-State football coach Stan Parrish and athletic director Steve Miller will meet this morning to discuss Parrish's future as coach of the Wildcats.

Even though Parrish received a vote of confidence from his team during a meeting Sunday, the third-year head coach — after first saying he would remain as coach until the season ends - said he wouldn't make a final decision until this morning.

"I'm the football coach here, and that's not going to change, at least until the end of the season.

"It's been an emotional weekend for the team and me," said Parrish, whose team squandered a 21-point lead and lost 31-28 Saturday to Louisiana Tech.

"I just need to get a good night's sleep tonight and wake up with a clear head," he added. "I'm going to meet with Steve and we'll make a decision then.'

Miller reiterated the position he has maintained since he was named athletic director - he would not fire Parrish during the season. "We haven't even remotely discussed the option of firing Stan before the end of the season, nor are we going to discuss it," Miller said. Miller also said he expected a final decision from Parrish would be made

"It will all be laid to rest soon, one way or another," Miller said. "I don't think the situation is going to run on ad infinitum."

Miller realized, though, that Parrish was obviously despondent following Saturday's loss.

"(Parrish has) had the same attitude he's had after every tough loss. I know he's very unhappy - more so than I've ever seen him before." Wildcat players contacted Sunday night said as far as they knew, Parrish

ASK will request priority funding

Associated Students of Kansas, the student lobbying group to the Kansas Legislature, on Friday announced the priorities it will pursue during the next legislative

Those priorities include the second year of the Margin of Excellence plan, the Kansas Student Community Service Program and the Kansas College Savings Program, said Scott King, K-State's campus director for

The position paper prepared by ASK listed improved morale, improved services, reduced class sizes and the retention and attraction of "top students" to state universities as reasons for optimism concerning the MOE.

The paper, however, stated the gains made last year may be lost in a single year, and ASK states, "The state must continue its commitment to higher education, and continue funding of the next two years of the

Fred Bramlage.

The name evokes anticipation in sports and music fans, respect in the eyes of area business people, and gratitude in the recipients of his monetary gifts.

The 78-year-old, silver-haired entrepreneurial icon defines himself as a simple man, "I love my town. I love my nation. I love

K-State." he said. "Someday - I hope not too soon - they'll bury me at Saint Mary's Cemetery in Junction City, and I'll be

People who know Bramlage and have worked with him commend the 1935 K-State graduate for his humble philanthropies.

"Fred is one of the finest people I've ever met," said Les Longberg, controller for the KSU Foundation. "He is a very sincere and dedicated K-State alumnus.

"Back when this project (the Coliseum) was beginning, Mr. Bramlage gave us an initial contribution figure. As things progressed and the costs grew, he came forward and donated the remainder to keep the project going," said Longberg, estimating the total cost of the coliseum at $18.3 million.

"This is a different figure than has ever been seen before, because I've added some things in from an accounting standpoint," he Bramlage donated about $2.75 million to the Coliseum fund.

"Fred deserves to have this thing named after him," Longberg said.

majored in business, but I'd been in business for myself since I was 19," Bramlage said. That filling station led him to become a wholesaler and distributor for the Mobil Oil Company. He invested his money in real estate and purchased the Junction City Distribution Company. These interests combined to make Bramlage a millionaire.

'We've been very lucky," Bramlage said of his and his wife Dorothy's business pursuits.

Bramlage is now semi-retired, although Roger Sink, Manhattan accountant and a friend of Bramlage, said he still puts in more hours than any other employee of the distri-

Hostage negotiations continue

JERUSALEM - Negotiators representing Iran and the United States met Sunday to discuss the release of eight Americans and one Briton held hostage in Lebanon, the editor of an Israeli newspaper said.

"According to our information, meetings have been going on during the weekend and will continue through the week in the same place," said Hesh Kestin, managing editor of the Nation newspaper.

Kestin said in an interview that the sessions were being held "near Geneva" and included delegations representing Iran and the United States, and "a mixed group" of intermediaries. He did not elaborate.

The Nation, an English-language weekly that began publication a month ago, reported Friday that the United States has struck a secret deal with Iran, promising economic aid and arms sales in exchange for the release of eight of the nine American hostages in Lebanon, the newspaper said.

It said the deal would include the release of frozen Iranian assets in U.S. banks and the resumption of diplomatic relations. President Reagan, White House officials and the State Department all denied the report.

According to the Nation, which quoted unidentified sources in Geneva, Iran would secure the release of five American hostages on or around Oct. 7. A second group of hostages, including three Americans and a Briton — possibly Terry Waite, a special envoy of the Archbishop of Canterbury — would be released a week later, the report said.

Floods leave many homeless

LAHORE, Pakistan - More than 1 million people have been left homeless by flooding in eastern Pakistan, government officials said.

The official government death toll from the flooding was 31 but unofficial reports put it substantially higher.

Nearly 2,000 villages were hit by the flooding from heavy rains in mid-September and more than 850,000 acres of land are still under water, reported the national news agency Associated Press of Pakistan.

Lahore, the ancient Punjab capital of 6 million people, remained cut off from most of western and northern Pakistan. Parts of the highway linking Lahore to Islamabad, the nation's capital, had been under water for several days.

Army soldiers have been flying over the hardest hit areas and dropping sealed food bags to people still clinging to their roofs to escape the water. Food along with medical supplies were also ferried to stranded residents by motor boat.

Officials said at least one million residents were forced to leave their homes.

About 42,000 people were vaccinated against typhoid and cholera, AAP reported on Saturday.

The threat from the Ravi and Chenab rivers in Pakistan's eastern Punjab province has passed but the Sutlej River flowing west from India continues to be a problem. Officials said the Sutlej, only a trickle since India built a dam 30 years ago, has risen dramatially.

In India, the government said last week at least 282 people have died in flash floods that have hit villages in Punjab and the neighboring states of Haryana, Himachal Pradesh and Jammu-Kashmir since Sept. 21.

The whales were shot after veterinarians, flown in by helicopter, examined them.

The other 32 whales became stranded Thursday. After a twoday operation involving hundreds of volunteers, the whales were returned to the water Saturday evening.

A helicopter sent early Sunday to check that they had not stranded themselves again spotted the second group beached high on a stretch of coast inaccessible to vehicles.

Father, sons found along road

CUMMING, Ga. - Two toddlers were killed and their father was critically injured while walking along a country road about a half-mile from home, and police said they "honest to God do not know" what happened.

The three all suffered "blunt trauma injuries" early Saturday, said Sheriff Wesley Walraven. The three - 2-year-old Brandon Miles Frix, his 3-year-old brother, Jarrett, and their father, Charles, 27 - were not shot or stabbed.

The sheriff's department reported no new clues or developments Sunday.

The three had left home on foot early Saturday after Frix and his wife apparently quarreled, Walraven said. A passing motorist found them lying in the roadway minutes later.

Frix was listed in serious condition Sunday with head injuries at Northeast Georgia Medical Center in Gainesville, and Bennett said authorities were waiting to question him.

There apparently were no witnesses, the sheriff said. Sheriff's department Detective David Bennett said authorities "just honest to God do not know how it happened."

Bennett said he could not speculate on whether the three might have been hit by a car or attacked.

The boys' mother told police she and her husband had quarreled, but said she did not know what happened on the road, Bennett said.

Couple to be wed atop float

PASADENA, Calif. - At their wedding, some couples may feel like they're on parade, or like they're floating, but in a few months one couple will take the experience to new extremes - with an estimated audience of 350 million people.

The search is on for a couple willing to exchange vows aboard a float, titled "Romance in California," in the Tournament of Roses Parade on Jan. 2. The annual parade, which precedes the Rose Bowl matchup of the Big 10 and Pacific 10 collegiate football champs, usually takes place on New Year's Day. But when Jan. 1 falls on a Sunday, as it does in 1989, the parade and bowl game are held on Jan. 2.

"The Search for the Most Romantic Couple in California" is sponsored by a local hotel, a radio station, a department store chain and a magazine.

The winning couple will be announced Dec. 3.

State receives more federal money

By Brenda Birt Collegian Reporter

Kansas receives more than the national average of federal spending per person, and ranks second behind Missouri in the states in this region, according to a news release from 2nd District Congressman Jim Slattery.

"This all means that Kansas comes out pretty good," Slattery said.

The national average of federal spending per person is $3,331, while Kansas receives $3,558. Iowa, ranking lowest in the region, receives $2,927.

"That obviously indicates Kansas does very well in terms of its relationship with the federal government," Slattery said. "There are other states that I'm sure are losers."

Kansas also ranks slightly above the national average in federal spend-tracts, but Missouri receives $429 per person more than Kansas. The reason for the difference is the defense contractors in St. Louis, Slattery said.

Kansas receives $18 more per person than the national average in salaries and wages paid by the federal government and $16 more per person in direct payments to individuals, such as Social Security and Medicare.

Kansas receives more than twice average in direct grants from the fed-as much as the national average in miscellaneous expenditures, such as energy grants, space research grants, and agricultural programs. All states in the region except Colorado rank above the national average in this

"The Midwest does well here because of agricultural programs," Slattery said.

Kansas, however, ranks last in the region and far below the national ral government to state and local governments. These funds are used for highways, housing and Medicaid.

Kansas does not receive a proportionate share, Slattery said, because of recent budget cuts and because Kansas has less poverty and urban areas than other states.

"This is the one area of the federal budget that has been dramatically cut in the past few years," he said.

The way to increase Kansas' share, Slattery said, is to apply for more grants.

"I think that Kansas can be more aggressive in securing more grants,"

In reducing the federal budget deficit, Slattery thinks a $40 to $50 billion reduction per year is possible over a three-year period.

"It's going to be difficult, but I think we can do it," he said.

By The Associated Press

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. Discovery's astronauts delivered a poignant salute Sunday to their fallen Challenger comrades, eulogizing them as fellow sojourners and friends, and saying "At this moment, our place in the heavens makes us feel closer to them than ever before."

Said astronaut John M. Lounge: "It's good to be back to where they wanted to go so

As they beamed down spectacular views of the mottled blue and white Earth miles below, the Discovery astronauts spoke about the Challenger — America's last manned space venture — which exploded on liftoff 32 months ago tragically killing school teacher Christa McAuliffe and six others.

"Those on the Challenger who had flown before and seen these sights, they would know the meaning of our thoughts," said astronaut George D. Nelson. Those who had gone to view them for the first time, they would know why we set forth."

Discovery is to return home from its four-day, one-hour, 65-orbit flight today, landing at Edwards Air Force Base in California at 12:37 p.m. EDT.

The astronauts may be a bit warm on their 10,000-mile glide home: a cooling system problem has plagued most of the flight may still not be working.

Olympics should center on individual success

nother Olympiad has come and gone and once again the world has been treated to a competition in which the planet's best athletes attempted to go higher, faster and farther than each other in the name of peace and goodwill.

The main purpose of the Olympics is to promote friendly, spirited competition among all nations. It is the goal of the International Olympic Committee that, for the 16 days of the Games, all nations will set aside political differences, and the world will sit back and enjoy watching more than 160 nations competing without guns or tanks. Unfortunately, the past few Games have treated the world to gross displays of nationalism. This Olympiad also treated the world to several displays of cheating and poor sportsmanship.

In 1980, the United States boycotted the Moscow Olympics as a protest of the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan. Not to be outdone, the Soviets boycotted the 1984 Los Angeles Olympics and convinced most of their allies to do the same. This year's Games were boycotted by North Korea and Cuba and, because of terrorist threats, the security at the Olympic complex was the tightest in Olympic history. Even the athletes were subject to numer-

Despite this security, some South Korean competitors) falling behind the Soviets and boxing coaches managed to beat up - with the aid of a security guard, no less - a boxing referee. In addition, steroid use was rampant. Just a week ago, Ben Johnson was the fastest man ever. Now he's suspended from competition for two years after testing positive for steriods. The entire Bulgarian weightlifting team withdrew from the Games after a number of their gold-medal winners were disqualified for steroid use. No other Olympiad has seen so much cheating. But why are athletes pushed to such measures?

The answer is in a media gimmick called the Medal Count. Every day during the Olympics, on almost every sports page, there was a little chart telling how many medals each country had won. Sportswriters and TV announcers talked, and probably will talk for weeks, almost incessantly about "who is ahead in the medal count." This makes the nation with the most medals the apparent 'winner" of the Olympics, even though the IOC gives no overall award. The IOC sees each event as an individual competition, not as a part of a whole.

Most people, however, do not feel that way. When U.S. citizens, for example, look at the all-mighty medal count and see themselves (please note that they consider themous searches when entering the complex. selves to be connected somehow with the

Commentary DWAYNE LIVELY Collegian Columnist

East Germans, they get a bit irate. They somehow believe that this shows their inferiority to the Soviets and they suddenly feel a strong wave of national pride. The rallying cry of the Olympics becomes, "Beat those Commies!" instead of, "Give it all you've got!" which is all we can ask of our athletes.

ith such an attitude prevalent in a country, losing becomes unacceptable. The Games are no longer games, but instead are little wars between countries. It seems as if the better a nation does in the medal count, the more powerful it is in the world. This attitude is not exclusive to the United States - nearly all the competing nations feel it. The South Korean coaches would not have attacked the referee for anything less than national pride. It is ironic that in their attempt to regain their pride, they hurt the nation's pride even more.

Their attitude, however, should not be considered extreme. With a war going on, the athletes are no longer competitors — they are soldiers and the pressure on them to win is incredible. Athletes who place only fourth, but, in doing so, achieve a personal best, are not recognized by their nations as having accomplished anything significant. Personal bests are not important to the citizens of a nation, unless those personal bests surpass the rest of the competition. Athletes must win. Period. There is no other acceptable

The athletes respond to the pressure they feel by doing whatever they have to do to win. Some leave school to train, others leave their jobs. But if the training falls short, and the athlete knows it will fall short, the athlete turns to steroids or other ways of cheating. We abhor that Ben Johnson won the 100-meter dash and used steroids, but we also abhor Carl Lewis for losing to him in the first

As U.S. citizens, the best place for us to see the pressure we put on our athletes to win is in men's basketball. Their losing is unacceptable, even though the U.S. men's basketball team has lost only twice in the Olympics ever. The men's basketball gold medal is taken for granted by U.S. citizens.

he U.S. team is expected to win and people get mad when they don't, especially when the defeat comes at the hands of the Soviets. Accusations about incompetent coaching, playing and officiating fly everywhere, but no one takes the time to thank the team for giving it their best shot. They are treated a lot like soldiers returning from a war they didn't win. No one wants to accept that they were simply out-played by a more experienced, more clever team.

If the Olympic Games are to remain an enjoyable event that is anticipated every four years, then all nations must get over their political bickering and their "medal envy." They need to look instead at the accomplishments of the individual athletes.

Costa Rica and Suriname each won only a single medal, according to the medal count, and only one, Suriname's, was a gold. Those medalists were welcomed home like true champions, despite the low medal count of the entire team. Their countries have no delusions of grandeur. Unlike the superpowers, they don't pressure their athletes to win. They are happy with what their athletes accomplish. The rest of the world can learn a lot from these two small nations. The Olympic Games are not a battleground. They are a place to set aside disputes in order to do and show your best.

Students should attend

EDITOR. MANAGING EDITOR

They exist not only to educate, but also to expose students to some of the finer things in life. Theater, painting and music, as well as many other forms of art, can be found in abundance on a university's campus.

At K-State, numerous art exhibits, concerts and plays are available to every student. Few students, however, take advantage of these cultural events.

For example, student ticket sales at McCain Auditorium have been low this year. Many say that this is because tickets to some of these events are not affordable for college students.

Hundreds of students, however, stood in line at Bramlage Coliseum last week to shell out $16.50 to see Def Leppard. Def Leppard may be considered a good rock band, but cultural it is not. Students are missing out on some fine events that they may never have the chance to experience again. If only they would wake up, they would see what is passing them by.

As long as students pay high prices for rock bands, they shouldn't complain about the price of tickets to cultural events.

Selection process hurts credibility

n Tuesday, the Student Senate confirmed appointments to a committee established to distribute about $250,000. The committee is expected to distribute similar sums in coming years. This information could be gleaned by anyone smart enough to read the first page of the Collegian instead of the sports page, which detailed the defeat of the U.S. men's basketball team at the hands of the Russians. As usual with money matters, there is a lot more to this story than meets the eye.

Student Body President Troy Lubbers and the Associated Students of Kansas - funded by our fees - claim that the establishment of this committee is a feather in their caps. The money the committee will distribute comes from the 6 percent fee increase this year. Five-sixths goes where fees usually go and one-sixth goes to this enterprise. The Kansas Board of Regents was unwilling to pass up this committee business and be satisfied with a 5 percent increase, according to Lubbers, and so we have to spend this money on student concerns. To give a sense of proportion, the sum involved is roughly equivalent to what the Senate allocates every year. This seven-member committee will spend what usually takes the full Senate, the Finance committee, and endless wrangling and hearings to spend.

This committee will present its recommendations to Senate for approval before sending them to President Jon Wefald by December. So we have a deadline, and the Senate will have to approve the distribution as it approved the committee nominations without time for serious investigation. Senate also has little control of day-to-day functions since it is technically a University committee.

This complicates the current procedures for spending student monies by creating this institution that is not quite a legislative or student entity, but involves the administration directly and is in direct competition with the existing structure. The new committee's recommendations will come to the Senate with the backing of the administration year after year. Student Senate has an agonizing time refusing and will rubber-stamp as usual.

The current composition of this committee is also interesting. The Student Body President qualifies automatically on account of the deep trust placed in him by possibly all of the 11 percent or 12 percent of us who voted. Then there is one student senator — this year the Senate chairman - and three at-large students representing the diversity that we see all around us on campus. Since Lubbers had no more than four months to devise a selection procedure, the nominations were made without advertising for the positions or having ordinary students apply. Even those who expressed an interest were not interviewed because Lubbers, by virtue of being the elected president, has an excellent notion of others' abilities without an interview and other troublesome formalities. The Personnel Selection Coordinator appointed by him was not consulted either. Maybe Lubbers knows something we don't.

In all honesty, I must admit that there is a chance of something good coming of this, but it would only be by sheer good luck. For the next year on, a selection procedure prescribed by the Senate could be used. Unlike the committee nominations, it is still on the floor. The Senate has not, to the best of my knowledge, seriously questioned Lubbers about this matter. Elections are coming up in November and if this fishy business smells to you, too, then do not re-elect the incumbents. Better still, run for Senate, not just to build a resume, but to be a good, useful citizen.

Hospitality industry growing; trend reflected in enrollment

By Brenda Birt Collegian Reporter

The number of students preparing for the hospitality industry has jumped about 30 percent this semester, which seems to follow the growth of the industry itself.

Enrollment in the Department of Hotel, Restaurant, Institutional Management and Dietetics has risen by 60 students this semester, bringing the total to about 225, said Charles Partlow, instructor in the department.

"The (hospitality) industry is growing too fast, and they need people to grow with them," Partlow said. "These businesses are just 30 years old and they account for $250 to $300 billion in sales per year and a projected $400 billion by the year 2000."

K-State prepares students to be knowledgeable hotel, motel and restaurant managers through a program that includes lectures on hotel and restaurant policies, field experience and business courses, he said.

courses with labs in Justin Hall, in agement. "I enjoyed it because I the residence hall food services and in the Union. Through the labs, students gain experience in a realistic environment, Partlow said, but the environments are highly controlled.

Students are then allowed more freedom in their experiences with practicum components, he said. In a restaurant operations course, students work 12 hours a week at Kramer Food Center and at a restaurant in Manhattan. Students also take a practicum course in hotel operations, working eight hours a week at the University Inn or the Holiday Inn & Holidome. They spend two weeks in each department, including accounting, banquets and catering, housekeeping, maintenance and the front desk.

Faculty and students have found the practicum components to be a positive learning experience, Part-

"(The practicum) is good in the sense that you get experience in different areas," said Jim Hise, Students take food production senior in hotel and restaurant man-hadn't (yet) worked in a hotel or a motel."

A major factor in the success of the practicum components is the department's use of the critical incident technique, Partlow said. The technique forces students to identify and solve problems they have while working in the hotels or restaurants.

"This program is designed to develop the students' selfevaluation skills and it makes them accountable for their performance," he said.

The field experience required of students is similar to an internship. Students can apply for a position with any company in any city. Partlow said he encourages students to go to a different area because the industry is based on traveling.

"How can you convince a company that you're willing to relocate if you've never been outside the area?" he said.

While working in the field, students can focus on areas they may need to strengthen, Partlow said.

Accidents puzzle officials

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - The Navy and Air Force, each puzzled by an unexpected increase in accidents this summer involving high-performing jets, have failed to find a common thread to explain the mishaps, officials say.

From a historical standpoint, the current accident rates for Navy and Air Force fighter and attack jets are not out of line, officials say. Indeed, the Navy is actually enjoying one of its all-time safest years for aviation.

Both services have launched careful monitoring campaigns because of accident spurts involving the Navy's F-14s and the Air Force's F-16s.

The Air Force says it has found no equipment problems, but has changed some of its pilot training techniques and increased supervision because of the rise in mishaps. Officials say several of this year's

F-16 accidents involved pilots who lost consciousness as a result of fast aerial maneuvers or who became disoriented and lost track of where they

The Navy hasn't detected any equipment problems, either, but has made no change in pilot training.

"We're just not seeing any common threads at all to justify changes," says Lt. Cmdr. Craig Quigley, a

Navy spokesman at the Pentagon. The Navy's accident spurt involves the service's top-of-the-line fighter, the F-14 Tomcat. The service went through the first eight months of 1988 with only one so-called Class A accident involving the F-14. The plane was lost but the two-man crew survived in that accident.

A Class A mishap is one in which there is either a fatality or damage exceeding $500,000 to an aircraft.

But in the month of September, the Navy lost five Tomcats - two or one day - and saw three of its aviators die. Two of the planes were lost on separate days from the same aircraft carrier, the USS Carl Vinson, while on patrol duty in the northern Arabian Sea.

During 1987, the Navy lost eight F-14s in accidents that produced two fatalities.

The mishap rates this year for the Navy's F-A-18 Hornet and A-6 Intruder, meantime, have dropped significantly below last year's levels.

Indeed, after the worst year ever for the F-A-18 in 1987 — when 10 Class A accidents were reported — only three such mishaps have occurred so

Experts guess possible effects of Quayle's debate showing

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Democrats who hope Sen. Lloyd Bentsen will help the ticket win his home state of Texas and perhaps the presidential election could do well to regard the fate of Henry Gassaway Davis.

In case anyone doesn't remember, Davis was Democrat Alton B. Parker's running mate when Parker ran for president against Republican Teddy Roosevelt in 1904.

The voters chose between Roosevelt and Parker, and their choice was Roosevelt by a 3-2 margin.

Experts concede that the vice presidential debate in Omaha, Neb., on Wednesday between Bentsen and Republican Dan Quayle may make a difference, but they say the voters' final decision will come down to a choice between the top of the tickets. Democrat Michael Dukakis and Vice destroyed in the debate with Bentsen, I don't think it will hurt Bush," said Leo Ribuffo, a specialist in political history at George Washington University in Washington.

"People will be looking for Quayle to blow it," said Samuel H. Kernell, professor of political science at the University of California at San Diego. "If he can get through the debate in a competent fashion where he looks unexceptional, it will be a real success for him."

Eddie Mahe Jr., a Republican political consultant, said, "I think it is reasonable to suggest that George Bush would have won Indiana (Quayle's home state) without Mr. Quayle, and with Mr. Bentsen, Mike Dukakis is still not going to carry Texas. So you wash that out."

"I think the odds are that Quayle will have little or no effect on the ulti-

Quayle ready for debate

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - Republican Dan Quayle says he views this week's vice presidential debate with Lloyd Bentsen as "a golden opportunity for me to just be myself" and to focus on his real opponent, Democratic nominee Michael Dukakis.

The Indiana senator said in a weekend interview with The Associated Press that he's not worried the Texas senator whose views about making any of his celebrated gaffes during the nationally televised debate at Omaha, Neb., on Wednesday, although "there's always that possibility."

Sounding confident about the confrontation with his Democratic counterpart, Quayle said: "I will be prepared."

The GOP vice presidential nominee said he will target his attacks on Dukakis rather than Bentsen, Quayle said are more in tune with Republicans than Democrats.

"The opponent for me is Michael Dukakis," Quayle said. "He's the one that's running for president. He's the one that if he would get in, I think it'd be very difficult time for this country."

Quayle and Bentsen, the latter home in Texas, are spending the next two days making final preparations for their debate.

get myself out of this? I could imagine how my legs would ache if I had to walk around with my knees bent all evening. So to stall for time, while figuring out how to fake malaria, I made us some Double Dutch Chocolate. When I brought it into the living unique chance to initiate the building with rock 'n' roll.

Hitting the stage with "California Girls" and four shapely bikiniclad dancers, the band moved through the classics "Sloop John B" and "Wouldn't It Be Nice?"

Dressed in white with his traditional white cap, singer Mike Love then introduced the Mama's and the Papa's hit "California Dreamin'," as the backdrop lit up with a serene ocean-front scene.

"We don't really want to do our car songs anymore," Love teased his fans before throttling into a set devoted to the hot rods the group made famous.

With a billboard backdrop of a black duece coupe, the group played "Little Deuce Coupe," "Little Old Lady From Pasadena,"
"Shut Down," "409," "Little GTO" and "I Get Around."

The Beach Boys' current single, "Kokomo," was a crowd favorite, and, with young and old still standing, the group moved into their most successful single, "Good Vibrations."

Donning a purple cap and K-State t-shirt, Love was joined on stage by members of the K-State cheerleading squads and Willie the Wildcat for a rousing rendition of "Be True To Your School."

They then played "Barbara Ann" and "Fun, Fun, Fun" to conclude the show. Love and the Beach Boys have been touring the country for the past 25 years and Saturday's show proved that the few original members left have aged well.

Various lineups have been used in recent years and this concert always featured at least seven musicians on stage, and had eleven for "Kokomo."

This musicians' co-op helped the group to create their smooth island sound and crystal-clear harmonies, but didn't create a clear finished product.

While the group's vocalization shone through, the collective sound coming from the stage was muffled for the first half of the show. As the sound mix improved, one has to wonder if a sound check was even made before the concert to prevent such problems.

The sound might have improved had the group brought an adequate amount of equipment. Instead, the band used only a handful of amplifiers on each side of the stage.

The Coliseum's acoustics seem satisfactory, although the upcoming Def Leppard concert will prove a better test.

Union decides against leasing space

By Scot Dye Collegian Reporter

Although other universities may find it feasible, Union officials have decided against leasing space in the Union to companies outside the University.

After weighing the advantages and disadvantages, officials decided to keep the food service program Union-operated, said Jack Sills, Union director.

"If (the Union) has room for improvement, we'd rather have the challenge than give it to someone else," Sills said.

By having a University-operated service, the money received from sales goes back into the operation, he said. This keeps the cost to students as low as possible.

Also, the Union can be more flexible and adjust the service's hours to accommodate conflicting programs, he said.

Several years ago, officials at the University of Kansas had an outside firm conduct a study to determine the feasibility of leasing space in the KU union. The study concluded that leasing the food service program to an outside party would not be worthof food service at the Kansas Memorial Union.

The KU officials compared the cost of leasing the space for a restaurant and its financial return with what the university could provide with the same amount of money. They decided it would be more profitable for KU to run the operation itself, Richeson said, adding that they were also hesitant of losing control of the

Other universities also want to keep the revenue generated from their food services.

Emporia State University operates the union food service itself in order to maintain a quality standard as well as to keep the profits in the union, said Jim Loebeck, director of dining services at Emporia

"When you do your own operation, you can make what you would pay an independent (restaurant) and use the money in the Union," Loebeck said.

Barbara Contardi, catering manager with the student union at Oklahoma State University, agreed with "Everything sold in the union is sold by the union, so we can keep the while, said Bob Richeson, manager money within the university," Contardi said.

The University of Nebraska, however, has found it profitable to have an independent restaurant in the union, said Daryl Swanson, director of the Nebraska Union. Nebraska has leased space to Burger King since 1987, Swanson said. "In the first year, (Burger King) did three times the gross sales of our own restaurant," he said. Burger King was able to extend the food service to students by staying open later, Swanson said.

Nebraska Union officials decided to take bids from interested franchises after student interest had declined in the union's original fastfood type restaurant, he said.

A student majority committee selected Burger King because it already had a franchise in town and because of its good reputation, Swanson said.

The University of Colorado offers students a variety of food choices by having five small restaurants within one large restaurant, said Mary Gibbs, acting director of food services at Colorado.

Colorado's union includes fastfood, deli sandwiches, hot entrees, Mexican food, and a combination coffee, pastry and ice cream bar, Gibbs said.

"Students can get something from each area and pay through one cashier," she said.

Pittsburg State University contracts the food service to American Food Management because they have more expertise, said Bob Riggs, director of dining services at Pittsburg.

"They take care of all the headaches so we don't have to. We miss out on some money, but the relief from the headaches is worth what we would make," Riggs said.

Bulldogs storm back to crush K-State

Second-half rally erases huge lead

By Chris Wilhelm Sports Writer

Once again, K-State's football team rewrote and then proved the old adage, one half does not a game make.

The Wildcats roared to a 28-7 halftime lead Saturday at KSU Stadium, only to have Louisiana Tech score 24 unanswered points in the second half to win 31-28.

"Being up that many points at halftime really hurt us," K-State wide receiver Greg Washington said. "It's not something we're very accustomed to around here. We came in at halftime taking the lead for granted.

"Football is a game of four quarters. You can't play two quarters and expect to win. You have to play four and today we didn't go the full length."

While K-State had several bright spots in the game, most came in the first half.

broke a school record by throwing more touchdowns in the first half (four), than any other K-State quarterback had thrown in an entire game. He also passed for 362 yards, the most in a game by any Big Eight quarterback this season.

Receivers Washington and David Brooks also had excellent first halves. Washington had seven receptions for 113 yards and a touchdown, and Brooks had two receptions for 138 yards and two touchdowns.

While K-State's offense played well in the first half, the 'Cat defense was having some success of its own.

The Wildcats held the Bulldogs to 59 yards rushing on 20 attempts and 136 yards passing. The final statistics tell the story of the game, however, as Louisiana Tech racked up 375 yards passing and 158 rushing yards for the game.

Watson, who hit Brooks with an 80-yard touchdown pass on his first play from scrimmage as a collegiate quarterback, was blazing in the first a touchdown.

half, hitting 11 of 20 passes for 278 yards and one interception. He wasn't as hot in the second half, completing only seven of 22 tries for 84 yards and three interceptions.

"I didn't even realize that I had broken a record," Watson said. "Records aren't really important here though. Winning is important. I would trade having my name in the record book for a victory."

"I knew that Watson was a good quarterback," K-State coach Stan Parrish said. "He did some really good things out there for us today. He misread a couple of reads in their defense in the second half and got himself in trouble a couple of times.

"I still feel that he is a good quarterback and he will probably go on to be a great quarterback."

Most of the Wildcats' problems in the second half were due to failing to score again quickly and a change in the Bulldogs' defensive strategy.

"We were ahead 28-7," Watson Starting quarterback Paul Watson said. "We went into the locker room at the half and said 'Hey guys, we have to go out in the second half and score some more points.' We didn't and that was the difference in the

> "They started blitzing us a little more (in the second half) and it threw us off. Our offense just couldn't move the ball as well as we did in the first half. I don't know why exactly. I guess we'll just have to watch films and figure it out," Watson said.

"We dictated the first half of the game," Parrish said. "They came back and blitzed us in the second half and we couldn't get them stopped. we had a chance to put them away early in the third quarter. We had the ball down on their end of the field and we just couldn't punch it in for a score."

The Wildcats weren't the only team with a player breaking a school record. The Bulldogs' Lifford Jackson caught 17 passes, setting a new Louisiana Tech single-game record. Jackson had 251 yards receiving and the catches and compete like Lifford going to do it." Jackson did today," Tech coach Joe Peace said. I don't think that anyone in the country would doubt what Lifford Jackson can do."

"I never thought that I would catch 17 passes in a game, maybe in a season but not in one game," Jackson said. "There was no way we were going to lose the game. Coach Peace told us (at halftime) if the defense holds them, we're going to score the points to win and we went out and

"I've never seen a receiver make scored 24 points. I knew we were

While Peace called Saturday's victory the greatest he's experienced as a head coach, he still had to sympathize with K-State.

"I'm so happy for our team, my staff and the offensive game plan they put together," Peace said. "I'm disappointed for coach Parrish and his young men. They played hard, hard enough to win, but fate didn't come their way."

game. The 'Cats had a 21-point lead, but the Bulldogs scored 24 unanswered points in the second half to win by three, 31-28.

Parrish opts to go for the win; pass intercepted in end zone

By Chris Hays Sports Writer

Those who left Saturday's K-State-Louisiana Tech football game at halftime were probably scratching their heads when they heard the final score that evening.

But not many of the 24,000 at K-State's Homecoming left, and what they witnessed was a heartbreaker. It was the Wildcats' sixth loss in a row and their 20th straight game without a victory, as Tech erased a 28-7 halftime deficit to post its second win,

"They came out and played better in the second half," K-State coach Stan Parrish said. "We couldn't get anything sustained or stopped."

But the last drive that K-State did sustain looked to have come at the right time. Down by three, with 2:49 remaining, K-State put its fate in the hands of redshirt freshman quarterback Paul Watson, who shined in his collegiate debut, throwing for four touchowns and 362 yards.

Watson rose to the occasion, leading the offense 53 yards in six plays, giving K-State a second and one from the Bulldogs' 27 yard line.

But, on the next play, an illegal procedure call pushed the 'Cats back to the 32, making it second and six. From there, Watson threw an incomplete pass, then was forced to scamper for just a yard due to a Bulldog blitz and that left Parrish with a decision to make.

Was he to go for the tie or try to nail down the' Cats first victory in nearly two years?

Figuring that he had seen one too many ties - last year's 17-17 deadlock with the University of Kansas in his three years at K-State, Parrish decided to pick the latter.

So, with 00:26 left showing on the clock, K-State called a time out to plan its last-ditch effort. During the break, junior receiver Greg lines and interrupted the conversation between Parrish and Watson, looking as if he knew something was

"I reccomended that we try to hit the post (crossing pattern) because I thought that I could get it (ball)," Washington said. "It had been open earlier and that's the play that we ran."

But maybe Washington's coming to the sidelines telegraphed the Wildcats' thinking to the Tech bench. The post pattern had double coverage this time, and Watson's pass to Washington was picked off by Bulldog defensive back James Jones as K-State showed for the 20th straight time that luck is just not on its side.

"It seemed like the weak safety (Jones) knew we were going to run the play," Watson said. "I didn't see him. It was one of those plays where its fourth down and you got to go for Washington came over to the side- it, but I should have hit the out pattern. I don't know if any of you saw it, but I should have hit the pattern."

> With K-State's football program struggling, should the 'Cats have gone for the win in a tight ballgame such as Saturday's, or should Parrish have invested in a little job security and gone for the tie?

> "Hell, no," senior offensive tackle Russ Stange said. "I'm out here playing this game because I want to win."

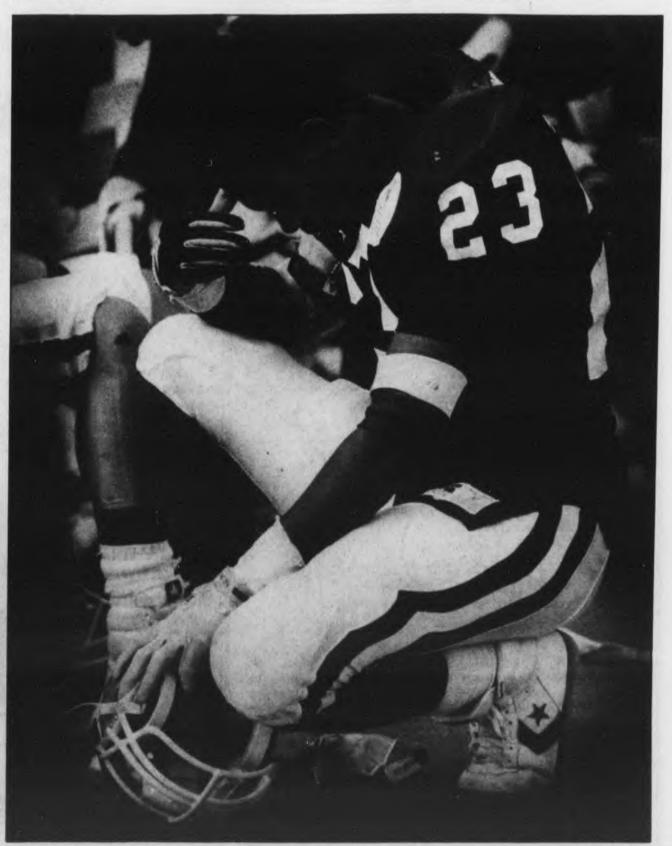

We were out here to win this football game," Parrish said. "In the third quarter, we had a chance to put this game away but we just lost the momentum."

"We had Tulane too and we just let it slip through our hands," Watson said, of K-State's last-second loss to the Green Wave earlier this season. "It's hard to lose a game like that (Tech). Obviously, they're not as good a ball club as we are ... by far."

Volleyball squad drops 2 matches

By The Collegian Staff

The news was not as bad as it might seem for K-State's volleyball team.

The Wildcats lost a tough fivegame match to Iowa State in Ames Friday to open the Big Eight Conference season and then fell in five games to Drake Saturday afternoon in Des Moines.

The losses left the Wildcats' 8-6 overall and 0-1 in the Big Eight heading into Wednesday's match with Nebraska in Lincoln against the fourth-ranked Cornhuskers.

But coach Scott Nelson sees light at the end of the tunnel.

'We are coming out of the struggle that we have been in," Nelson said. "I think our intensity level is back to where it needs to be. We just have to recognize who is in control of the match and put more pressure on our opponents."

The weekend losses were very similiar in that K-State led 2-1 in games before losing a nip-andtuck fourth game and falling in the

Against the Cyclones, the scores were 15-12, 16-14, 6-15, 18-16 and 15-9.

At Drake, the results were 15-8, 9-15, 13-15, 15-13, 15-12.

"Iowa State and Drake played great volleyball," Nelson said. Both matches were decided when we lost the fourth game.

"We made some errors at critical times that put more pressure on us," he said.

K-State played with somewhat of a short stick. Outside hitter Shawnee Call left the Iowa State match in the second game with a sore shoulder and did not see any more action.

At Drake, she played only on the back row.

Gold medal stolen from U.S. boxer

By The Associated Press

SEOUL, South Korea - Pain burns, hate consumes and Roy Jones Jr. is carrying around a belly full of

He is 19 and a year out of high school - old enough to know life isn't fair, still rash enough to want to strike back.

Three boxing judges shamelessly stole the biggest piece of Roy Jones' ambition, and so he talks now about throwing the rest away. "It was my dream to get a

Sunday

South Korea's Park Si-hun was handed the most controversial medal of these often-contentious Games.

"It was my father's dream. But it didn't happen. ... I think that's the end of the line for boxing."

That would be the greater shame. Jones, the youngest member of a U.S. boxing contingent that finished with three golds, three silvers and the same number of bronzes, is arguably its best. And he appeared to make the case stronger Sunday.

Jones battered Park repeatedly with left hooks and right leads through all nine minutes. Park took a standing 8-count with 48 seconds left in the second round and clearly was hurt several times by combinations in the third.

Jones was in control the entire way, but the bell that spared Park may have been the last familiar sound he carries away from the experience.

Koreans had talked of retribution since they walked away from Los Angeles four years ago, smarting after being on the wrong end of many of the same bad decisions that have been doled out in the Chamshil Students Gymnasium these past two weeks.

That feeling manifested itself in one near-riot and a bizarre Olympicrecord 67-minute sit-in by losing bantamweight Byun Jong-II, in a wave of anti-American sentiment throughout the bouts, and most devastatingly — and unjustly — on the cards of the judges.

appropriate, but not entirely satisfying.

Immediately after the decision was announced, Jones was lifted off the canvas by Park amid catcalls and

"It's not the guy's fault," said Jones, recounting a brief conversation the two had just before the medal ceremony. "He said he's sorry and he lost the fight, but the judges gave it to

Kim Seung-youn, president of the Korean Amateur Boxing Federation and commissioner of the boxing venue, said he was resigning.

Kim said the attack by Korean boxing officials on New Zealand referee Keith Walker in the aftermath of the Byun decision "left a blot on the efforts of seven years of the people of Korea."

In his next breath, however, Kim called the decision against Jones "very, very fair. There is no scandal today. It cannot happen.

"I do not understand," he added, "why foreigners have such prejudice against Korea."

U.S. boxing coach Ken Adams What was left in its wake may be thinks he does. He claims to have seen an unnamed Korean handing out what appeared to be pieces of gold to two officials, at least one of whom judged the Jones-Park affair. While there is certainly precedent for such things, a press spokesman for the Korean federation dismissed Adams' claim by saying what Adams saw were keychains being given to all boxing officials at the Olympics. Korean viewers, many of whom called the New Zealand delegation after the Byun fight to call for referee Walker's head, called television station KBS instead Sunday to express "embarrassment" over the decision.

And Anwar Chowdhry of Pakistan, president of the International Amateur Boxing Association, said he believed not only had the Jones decision been unfair, but that "unfortunately, in boxing we have been having bad decisions in every international tournament."

Chowdhry then announced - this seems almost too incredible - that Jones was selected by the association to receive the Val Barker Award, given to the outstanding boxer.

Royals end season with 5-1 loss to Chicago

By Tom Morris Sports Writer

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - It was a little bit fun at times, and it was a little bit sloppy. The it in this case was the end of a long season for two Major League Baseball clubs.

Kansas City's game with the Chicago White Sox Sunday in Royals Stadium epitomized the Royals' 1988 season. With the bases loaded in the bottom of the first, and nobody out, Kansas City wasn't able to score. Twice more the Royals had men in scoring position with less than two outs and they only scored once.

Chicago went on to win the game,

It was a typical game between two non-contenders. Only 19,951 fans showed up. Talk in the press box centered on stars of the World Wrestling Federation, or the demise of college football in the state of Kansas.

The play in the field was just as ckadaisical at times. In the top of the sixth inning, Chicago first baseman Mike Diaz was picked off first base by George Brett - the victim of the hidden ball trick.

It was such a carefree game that Brett made his first appearance at shortstop in more than two seasons.

Although the Royals finished the season at 84-77, which tied them with their third-highest total of wins since the 1980 campaign, it left their manager and players slightly disappointed and looking forward to next

"It's time to look toward 1989," Manager John Wathan said. "We were disappointed that we didn't play better, but then again it could have been worse."

Added Brett, "Seeing what could have happened and what actually happened is a big difference."

A classic example of Brett's statement was the pitching performance of Bret Saberhagen. In his 35th start of the season, Saberhagen dropped to 14-16, giving up nine hits and four runs. Only one other pitcher in the American League has more losses.

It was also a disappointing season for Floyd Bannister (12-13) and Charlie Leibrandt (13-12). Only Mark Gubicza (20-8) proved to be a consistent starter this season.

But the same can't be said for Kansas City at the plate.

Danny Tartabull reached 100 RBI for the second consecutive season with 102. Kevin Seitzer, with better than a .300 average (.304), has been over .300 in each of his first two Brett took the Royals' batting title at .306, and played 157 games, his most since 1985. Brett, though, saw his batting average drop more than 30 points in the last two months.

Mental, not physical fatigue, was the cause, said the oft-injured first

"My arms felt strong, my legs were strong, I think I just got mentally fatigued. In my mind, I was only used to playing 120 games like I had in the past two seasons."

But for now, the ERAs and errors can be forgotten until April 3 when the Royals open the 1989 campaign against Toronto.

Or can they?

"I wish the season was starting tomorrow," Wathan said.

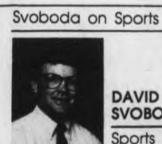

Staff/Jim Dietz

George Brett and the rest of Kansas City's dugout survey the losing situation on the field late in Sunday's game. The Royals finished 84-77.

Kansas City second baseman Brad Wellman throws to first after picking off White Sox runner Lance Johnson in the eighth inning. The Royals lost to Chicago, 5-1, in the season closer at Royals Stadium.

Punting Parrish isn't the answer

DAVID SVOBODA Sports Columnist

First the facts, then the surprising suggested solution.

Fact No. 1: Stan Parrish and his coaching staff got too conservative in the second half of Saturday's 31-28 loss against Louisiana Tech, and K-State paid for it with yet another defeat.

K-State had six first-down plays in the third quarter of the loss to Tech, and gained a total of 21 yards on those six plays. Simple math will tell you that gaining an average of 31/2 yards a play on first down leaves you with second-and-long far too many times.

In second-and-long situations, defenses can sit back and look for the pass. Teams can also blitz nearly everyone in their linebacking corps - even teams like Louisiana Tech that aren't known for blitzing.

Fullback dives and medium- to long-range passes aren't called for in such situations. Try a five-yard out, a quick slant, the sprint-out pass, anything but a run straight ahead or a throw way down the field.

Folding the tent offensively with a 21-point lead early in the second half is not smart.

Fact No. 2: Changing defensive coordinators once a season starts is not smart.

Parrish's recent move to put firstyear assistant Jon Tenuta in charge of the Wildcat defense should have been made before the season started. If then-defensive coordinator Jerry Hartman had any question he might have trouble coaching both the linebackers and the entire defense, he should have stepped down in July, not September.

That type of disruption - regardless of how minor it's considered to be - can't help a defense that is young and has several key players in their first full years at new positions.

Fact No. 3: Fights like the one at the end of the game between K-State's Lorne Whittle and seemingly the entire Louisiana Tech team are understandable, but should be avoided at all costs.

It's good to see that someone anyone — is fed up with losing enough to not take any lip while it's happening. It's discouraging, however, that a loss has to be compounded with poor sportsmanship.

Parrish-coached teams have always been academically strong and have displayed class from the word "go," but this group needs to watch itself in front of the young kids who are the future of this team and this institution.

Fact No. 4: Stan Parrish is a winner and his resume — regardless of what a group of experts in what I'll call "recent history" might say proves it beyond a shadow of a doubt.

In case you've forgotten, this is the same coach that guided Marshall University to its first winning season in 20 years in 1984, and had that same Marshall team ranked in the Top 20 in the NCAA Division I-AA polls for seven weeks in 1985.

This is also the coach with the guts to turn down Purdue University's offer to apply for its vacant coaching job and stay at K-State.

Parrish had two different stints at Purdue, and would have been a likely front-runner for the job eventually obtained by former University of Texas coach Fred Akers.

Instead, Parrish, a man of unquestioned integrity, turned down Purdue cold, not even turning in an application. He had a job to do at K-State, he said, and he's still here trying to get it

Now, the surprising solution: Let him get it done.

President Jon Wefald, stay out of this situation entirely. You hired a new athletic director, Steve Miller, to administrate so let him do it. Don't bow to the pressure of influential alumni who want Parrish's hide. Let Miller make the choice. You're a University president, not an athletic

Steve Miller, evaluate, take the pulse, do what you have to do, but keep the promises you made public with Wefald before the season even started. Parrish should be given the entire season to win the "required" two games to save his job. If he hasn't won them, fire him if necessary. Give him a chance now, however, to prove he's capable of winning here. That's all Parrish wants or

Finally, to Stan Parrish, do the job you know you can do. You're not

If one takes an objective look at the sheer numbers of talented players that are here now in comparison with when Parrish arrived, the difference is astounding.

Parrish has recruited some of the most exciting skill-position players ever to wear purple and white. The argument that "Parrish can't even win with good players" is all but laughable. Who do you think brought those players here? All but a few of those in the current senior class were recruited by Parrish's staff. If the depth isn't there yet, that will come in

For now, however, Paul Watson is a future All-Big Eighter, Antoine Dulan is the best raw talent this school has seen in at least 10 years, and the young players on defense have re-defined the word 'aggression."

Parrish has also turned the program around academically. K-State's squad was one of just 13 recognized in 1987 for a graduation rate exceeding 70 percent. That's a big plus. Firing Parrish now, or even at the season's end if he wins the required two games, is no solution. Look at the school a few miles up Interstate 70. The coaching merry-go-round there is non-stop, as is the losing.

The only way the merry-go-round of losing will end here is with Stan Parrish on board.

Parrish and his staff need to be aggressive, less conservative when push comes to shove, and need to flex their muscles when times get tough.

But they've got to be here to do it.

Let the man finish what he's started. He deserves the opportunity after three years of hell.

Golfers finish fourth

The K-State women's golf team finished fourth at the seventeam Shocker Fall Classic played Friday through Sunday in Wichita.

The men's golf team will be at Oklahoma City today and Tuesday for the 12-team All-College Golf Classic.

At Wichita, Kansas won the event with a 942, followed by Wichita State at 945, Kansas' No. 2 1,006, K-State 1,025 and Missouri-Kansas City 1,176. Creighton and Southwest Missouri State did not play the third and final round. K-State's top golfer was Chris Adams with a three-day total of 248. She was followed by Adena Hagedorn and Jill Zientara at 254 and Teresa Coyle and Lona Dale at 275.

Medalist honors went to Wichita State's Ann Vandermillen, who carded a five-over par 224.

Kansas City ties Jets

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. - Steve DeBerg capped a sizzling fourth-quarter rally with an 8-yard touchdown pass to Emile Harry with 51 seconds left in regulation and the Kansas City Chiefs tied the New York Jets 17-17 Sunday.

Harry's catch climaxed an 80-yard, 13-play drive. Harry had four receptions for 59 yards on the drive and DeBerg was 9-for-13 for 175 yards in leading the fourth-quarter surge.

With 38 seconds left in overtime, Freeman McNeil fumbled at the Chiefs' 15, the Jets' fourth turnover of the game.

New York dumps Cardinals

NEW YORK - Darryl Strawberry homered twice and reached the 100 RBI mark Sunday as the National League East champion New York Mets won their 100th game, beating the St. Louis Cardinals 7-5.

Ron Darling, tuning up for his start Friday night in Game 3 of the playoffs against Los Angeles, won his fifth consecutive decision since Aug. 21 for his career-high 17th victory. He also went 3-for-3 and drove in two runs, doubling his season total.

The Mets set a team record with their 56th victory at home, including the last 11 in a row for another club mark. The crowd of 42,099 brought the season attendance to 3,047,724, a team record.

Bickleton welcomes flocks of bluebirds

By The Associated Press

BICKLETON, Wash. - Birdhouses outnumber homes in this tiny community, which bills itself the bluebird capital of the world and goes out of its way to make sure the shy birds keep coming back.

This town of 150 in the windswept Horse Heaven Hills first gave bluebirds an incentive to stay more than two decades ago, and they have returned again and again to raise their young and provide a little extra income for a depressed economy.

"It's a real community pride," said Lynn Mains, co-owner of a restaurant and one of many who help maintain the birdhouses.

The Bickleton bluebirds are now gathering in flocks for their mid-October migration to Mexico or southern California. The males begin returning in February, often to the same house, and are followed by the females.

Although the altitude and climate of this wheat country are ideal for bluebirds, their population was declining two decades ago, Mains said. The birds are cavity dwellers, and there were not enough dead trees or rotted fence posts for them to build nests in.

Jess Brinkerhoff of nearby Richland realized the problem while camping in the area with his wife, Elva, in 1965. They nailed up a rusty one-gallon can, and that became the first of about 1,500 birdhouses that fill the town and dot the surrounding countryside.

At first, the Brinkerhoffs were the lone caretakers for the birds, building, cleaning and maintaining the houses. "My wife passed away four years ago, and then the people of Bickleton took over," said Brinkerhoff, 78.

Because arthritis and advancing age have slowed Brinkerhoff down, the chief birdhouse maker now is Bill Shotwell, who's built about 400.

"I usually saw out the pieces for 100 birdhouses and drill the holes, and I'm supposed to be retired," Shotwell said.

Unlike the many swallows that swarm to San Juan Capistrano in southern California on the same day every year, just a few thousand bluebirds trickle into Bickleton.

But that was enough to lead the North American Bluebird Society to proclaim Bickleton the bluebird capital of the world in 1983. The Brinkerhoffs also were recognized.

It's not easy to keep bluebirds in the neighborhood. Old nests must be completely cleaned out each winter, and the houses need periodic maintenance.

The houses are white and the roofs blue, approximating the color of the male bird's plumage. "The females are attracted to it," Mains explained.

The little town hasn't profited much from its bluebirds, mostly because it is so far off the beaten path. Bickleton is 50 miles south of Yakima, on a narrow, winding twolane road that climbs steeply up to the
